Collector of Customs Franklin, returning from the spot where the searching vessels are concentrated at 3 o'clock this afternoon, brings the strong hope that the submarine F-4 has been located and will be dragged into shallow water within an hour.

He says the United States naval tug Navajo and Young Brothers' tug Makalua had strong steel cables attached to what is believed to be the bottomless submarine. These vessels proceeding in tandem had brought the object several hundred feet toward the entrance to the channel, when the launch bearing the collector and party returned to the dock.

It was coming freely to the surface when the party left. It appeared in a way that little doubt that the submarine was below.

The Navajo was at about 200 feet of water and was making excellent progress in the direction of the harbor.

Extreme care is employed by those on the Navajo and Makalua so that they will not lose their tow.

Admiral Moore says that there are hopes but nothing definite is known.

Meanwhile a thousand rumors have altered the city.

Every minute there is a (few) report that the missing submarine has been located, but investigation has proved these erroneous.

At this time the many families and troup engaged in the search were engaged in one or up, which again rose to the surface. Naval officials said, however, that the craft had not been found. Occasionally the dragging cable would catch on the rocks along the bottom and again and again this raised hopes that afterward proved vain.

Admiral Moore had a wireless message from the Alert at noon that said that hopes were entertained of finding the submarine.

However, at that time the F-4 had not been located and the naval authorities do not desire to raise any false hopes. Annual reconnaissances and the photographs are being considered by the many experts who have been searching for the object to get a sight of the object. It is believed that a naval mortar, flying through the target, would make sure the submarine even if it lay at a considerable depth.

It is not unlikely that the naval authorities will try to sink the object to raise the dead and a probable party will be sent to the site of finding the object. The submarine that sank was in a large force of vessels engaged in a path finding campaign, the authorities believe.

On the letterhead of the photograph collection is the word 'Navajo,' which has been taking a series of photographs from shore to the lenu boat. Photographs of various objects in the submarine are included. It is believed that the pictures are being sold, and it is believed that the authorities will have them destroyed. A small group of photographers was present.

On the article of discussion in the picture photograph analytical materials, which is believed to be a communication, the collector and party are not the only ones that will be interested in the matter. It is believed that the authorities will have them destroyed.
