EVERYONE who can hold a Victory bond should acquire one, be it large or small. They only run three or four years and the interest rate should keep them at par. Then think of the honor of helping to pay for the great victory.

AN industrial observer points out that government control and operation of railroads, telephone and telegraph has proved two things: that increased rates were necessary under government control—same as under private control, and that claims of private companies that such increases were necessary were fully substantiated. It might be explained that since war prices came upon us the big companies, and everybody else, have had to have more income to meet the increase in expenditures for labor or material, or both.
