HAS SEEN SOME FIGHTING.

The following letter from Clarence Elliot to his brother Harry is as interesting for the modesty with which it tells of what Clarence has been doing as it is for its historical facts. The letter says practically nothing about the work done but the clipping referred to and published in connection with the letter tells a mighty interesting story and shows the stuff American soldiers are made of. The clipping is from the Paris edition of the New York Herald.

Base Hospital 35
Nov. 27 '18

Dear Harry—
Guess you think I am a mighty poor hand to write letters, but it is hard to write when one goes three months without any mail. When I reached the company after leaving the hospital my mail had been sent after me and before it got back I went to a hospital again. Am feeling fine now. Let my company a few days before the armistice was signed so wasn't in on the finish.

Believe me, Harry I have seen all the war I want to. Six months of it and five different fronts. If I could only find out whether John came through O. K. Tomorrow is Thanksgiving day and gee but I would like to be home for a real feed. Last year at this time was at Camp Mills and later had my Christmas dinner in the middle of the ocean. December 12th will have been in foreign service one year. Don't know when I will get back.

Will close by wishing all a Merry Christmas and next year we will all be together. If you write me, address the letter Co. C. 121 M G Batl.

Am sending a clipping about my division.

GALANT 32nd HAS FOUGHT 20 GERMAN "CRACK" DIVISIONS

It Has Fought on Five Fronts and Never Yielded Yard of Ground

(Special Telegram to the Herald.)
From BURR PRICE.
With the American Armies, Thursday.
When the American army of occupation started its march toward the Rhine on November 17, one of our crack divisions, the Thirty-Second, was celebrating an anniversary. Just six months before this division first planned the American flag on German soil in Alsace. On May 19, Wisconsin and Michigan men came under enemy shell fire and from that date to Nov. 11 the division has outmarched Boche guns. Only ten days after its turn in the trenches the Thirty-Second chased the Boche from the Oureq to the Vesle. Then it went to a sector north of Soissons and stormed Juvisy Plateau, fighting side by side with the heroic "poilus" of General Mangin.

After that victory with the French it had a rest for ten days before getting ready for the final drive. The American army's scrap north of Verdun was but three days old when the Thirty-Second went in and for the next three weeks the Wisconsin and Michigan boys battled the Boche for Kreinheide Stellung. It was they who finally broke through the key position of "La Dame Marie" from which they then pushed on to Freya Stellung, pushing the Boche gunners out of Bantheville Wood. They carried the line up to the point where the final attack, on November 1, was launched and followed in support of the divisions which crossed the Meuse at Dun and captured Stenay. In the last few days of the war the Thirty-Second went into line in the Meuse bridgehead sector and with the French were in the midst of an attack when the armistice stopped fighting. During the war the division has fought on five fronts—Alsace, the Vesle, Soissons, Argonne and the Meuse and has fought twenty of Germany's best divisions, among them the Prussian Guards. It has never yielded a yard of ground to the enemy's counter attacks.
