TEDDY VISITS MADISON HOME

WASHINGTON, D. C. Nov. 29.—The home of President Madison, near Montpelier was the objective point of a trip taken by President and Mrs. Roosevelt, Miss Ethel and Quentin yesterday.

The entire trip occupied 11 hours. This is the fulfillment of a desire of Roosevelt's to visit the homes of former presidents and made a pleasant outing for the holiday.

KLEINSCHMIDT WAS SHADOWED.

Officers Learn Many Damaging Statements From the Defendant.

BERKELEY, Cal., Nov. 29.—It has been learned that several days before he was arrested Harry Kleinschmidt was closely interrogated by the officers, who secured many damaging statements from him against himself which were presented to the grand jury. The substance may be revealed when the application for a writ of habeas corpus comes up tomorrow.

EXPRESS COMPANY MOVES.

N. P. Express Now at Home in the Thiessen Building.

The Northern Pacific Express company has been moved into the Thiessen building, where excellent quarters have been provided. The change in the location has been made necessary by plans of the Lewiston National bank, which provide for utilizing the room formerly occupied by the express company.

Aged Merchant Suicides.

TACOMA, Nov. 29.—Frank Kuchera, aged 63, a prominent wholesale leather dealer of this city, fired a bullet into his brain at his home yesterday. He was despondent from illness.

Resume of Wall Street

By Henry Clews

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—Somewhat improved conditions prevail in the financial district. Hysteria has at last disappeared and is now giving way to a sober recognition of the fact that conditions have radically changed, and that the sooner business begins to readjust itself to these new conditions, the sooner will it be started on the road to real recovery. Of course the abnormal stringency in money is still the chief source of difficulty. Until that abates it is idle to look for any change for the better. Credit is badly disorganized and unable to take its part in the nation's transactions. Consequently there is an abnormal demand for currency just when the prevailing distrust keeps alive the tendency to hoard. Not until the premium on currency begins to disappear; not until clearing certificates begin to rise can any genuine improvement be looked for. It is quite evident, now that the situation has passed beyond the possibility of relief by artificial measures, that it must be allowed to work out its own solution.

Inevitable Readjustment.

Events must take their natural course. There is already a very large increase in currency supply, and we possess an enormous stock of gold, which promises to be still further increased by importations from abroad. As soon as business returns to the normal or settles down to the lower level we will surely be confronted with an excessive inflation of currency and all the unpleasant consequences which that may involve. This, however, is a contingency somewhat remote and can be best dealt with when it arrives, which may not be until the end of winter or the arrival of spring. During the interim we shall probably be fully occupied with the inevitable process of readjustment into which we have plunged with unexpected force and suddenness. Incidentally we may receive some encouragement by the efforts of congress to give us a sound and elastic currency system; for that is sure to be a burning and possibly the leading question in the coming season. Unfortunately the legislative outlook is confused by a multiplicity of propositions and by the absence of any unity of purpose or strong leadership; but something is almost sure to be done to correct the rigidity of our currency system, which is now so seriously aggravating the financial situation.

Fortunately Good Demand.

The panicky feeling so prominent in Wall Street two or three weeks ago has now extended in modified form into general business. Merchants are often seriously inconvenienced by the contraction in credit, buyers seek to cancel orders and values are frequently weakened in consequence. Fortunately there are few markets that are overstocked and this prevents any such wholesale slump in commodities as occurred in securities. If any oversupply develops, it will come from lessened consumption; and as steps are already being taken to curtail production in the iron, cotton and other industries that danger is being reduced to a minimum. There is little doubt that when the monetary situation improves, the conditions of general business will be found fairly satisfactory and sound. It is of course universally recognized that costs of production are too high and must be reduced. It is also recognized that we are in for a period of business depression of greater or less extent. The heavy curtailment of pig iron production, the partial closing of factories, and the discharge of many employes, as well as the postponement of many enterprises, are all uncontrovertible evidences of reaction. But this can be endured and the necessary readjustment effected without great injury provided it comes gradually and is generally foreseen. It is the unexpected troubles that do the most injury; those which are anticipated can generally be guarded against.

High Rates Are Over.

On the Stock Exchange there was continued depression owing chiefly to high rates for money and further liquidation. Time money is exceedingly scarce, rates being from 8 to 12 per cent and even higher. Of course, the forced contraction of credit is accompanied by frequent calling or shifting of loans, and this in turn compels a steady stream of liquidation. From the interior the demands for currency are still insistent in spite of gold imports and large additions to the circulation. About $43,000,000 of gold have thus far been received and the movement is now expected to reach $80,000,000, the bulk of which we may have to return next spring. A fortunate circumstance was the refusal of the Bank of England to raise its rate from 7 to 8 per cent, such action having been expected in order to stop the American scramble for gold. Perhaps London expects that our demands are nearly satisfied, or that we may be successful in securing a supply from Paris, or that the situation here will soon improve. At any rate we have thus far escaped an 8 per cent Bank of England rate, which would certainly act adversely upon this market. Much of the weakness shown during the week was due to liquidation of parties who were tired over when the panic was at its height in order to save them from unnecessary sacrifices.

Forced Selling on the Market.

Inevitably there must be considerable selling from such sources. The scarcity of money is also compelling the selling of securities to meet subscriptions on new issues which are due within the next sixty days and which must amount to considerable sums. Wall Street at present is in a fit of the blues of the deepest shade. Its chief consolation is in the fact that there is plenty of company and that losses are being taken more and more philosophically. The necessity for readjustment is now fully admitted, the chief question being how best to meet the crisis. Happily the process of recovery has already begun and easier conditions are already in sight. Meanwhile the only solution appears to be that of allowing events to take their natural course with as little artificial interference as necessary. That is certainly the best method for the elimination of weak spots as well as for the laying of safe foundations on which to base a new forward movement when the time is ripe. On the other hand, it should not be overlooked that there is an increasing short interest in the market; that the declines have been extreme, and that good securities are selling far below their intrinsic value. These are times of great opportunity for the genuine investor; since, while prices may touch a lower level in case of further difficulties in the money market, the decline will surely be temporary in the better class of stocks and bonds. Actual investments made on the breaks hereafter can scarcely fail to prove exceedingly profitable.

The Plow Woman

BY ELEANOR GATES

In this tale of North Dakota at the time immediately following the Custer massacre we have one to stir the blood of the most jaded novel reader.

The Plow Woman plowed because she must and lost none of her womanly sweetness in doing so. Threatened by hostile Indians and more dangerous enemies of her own race who sought to oust her with her sister and helpless father from their quarter-section, she becomes a heroine characteristically American and possible only in America.

CONSTIPATION

For over nine years I suffered with chronic constipation and during this time I had to take an injection of warm water once every 24 hours before I could have an action on my bowels. Happily I used Cascarets, and today I am a well man. During the nine years before I used Cascarets I suffered untold misery with internal piles. Thanks to you I am free from all that this morning.
