AS THE EDITOR SEES IT

The sting of the honey bee is a joy to the sting of price boosting that is going on all over the country. The price of postage stamps and air, however, remain at normal.

Try it for one day. Give a cheerful word to everyone you see from the time you awake until you go to sleep at night. Then note the change in your feelings.

Young man, the road to wealth and fame does not lie through idleness and street corners. Successful men are never found there, and men who have made names and fortunes for themselves were not found there in their youth.

If it was simply an increase of the one five per cent or so all along the line it would not be such a burden. But it is not. Every fellow who handles it wants to suck a little extra blood from the turnip, until by the time it reaches your home or business office the original increase has multiplied many fold. How does it feel to be a goat, anyway?

If some live merchant will spend an hour or two some evening with his store blinds down and install a handsome and attractive window display, something unique and out of the ordinary, and then advertise it in this paper, we venture the prediction that at least half of the people in this community will be around to see it. And many of them will buy just because they happen to be there. Advertising will get the people to a store that is worth going to, but the merchant and his own goods must do the selling. Step up, gentlemen. What merchant in this town wants the people to beat a path to his store?

Whether a man is a true Progressive or not may be judged largely by his attitude toward labor unions. Roughly speaking our laws have done nothing for labor. Whatever the workmen have earned in wages or comfort or shorter hours has been won by agitation and often by terrorization. The union has given labor power to make demands. Capital often increases wages, just as the Steel Trust did the other day. But these increases are generally made to meet the union's demands, or to forestall the union. It is not merely organized labor that has benefited by the work of the union. Whenever the union is able to advance wages among union workers the non-union worker reaps the benefit. No one with the slightest knowledge of economic history has any doubt but that the union, with its power to strike, has been the one force that has stood between labor and absolute slavery in the last half century. Therefore, the test of a candidate's progressivism lies in his attitude toward the union.

A new one has been sprung on an overworked public by a murderer who claims that he killed his wife in order to keep her pure. And, we think, dancing on air is the best method of keeping him pure.

Some people know a lot, but don't know how to let other people know that they know it.

Well, well, well! How's the war, anyway? Every time we read about it we know less than when we began.

Young men who are inclined to lead a fast life would best keep in the vicinity of a hitching post.

The man who persistently ignores improved methods of farming is himself eventually ignored by the goddess of fortune.

Little man, when your ma gives you a penny to buy candy just go out and earn one yourself, buy candy with it, and salt the other down. You'll be rich some day.

Some Americans are as crazy over money as a bed bug is over human blood. In this, however, we do not speak from experience.

General Nelson A. Miles thinks that a federation of nations would put an end to war. So do we. But the trouble is, the kings and emperors and other potentates won't listen to either Miles or us.

THE SONG BIRD
