TWO HANDSOME GOWNS IN POPULAR MATERIALS

Here are two handsome gowns by La Racontesse, developed in silk muslins and the soft crepe materials so popular now. The dinner gown is of smoke gray muslin and old pink brocaded Crepe de chene. The bodice is decollete in a "V" front and back is draped with broad pleats of the brocade making a fichu and making the sleeve, which is ended by a band of empire green velvet. The girle is of draped brocaded satin and goes up rather high in the middle front holding in the back a long flap of the same material. Four broad pleats of the silk muslin make a small tunic in front following the line of the hips. The skirt of brocaded satin is slightly draped in the back and finished by a small round train.

The afternoon dress is of lemon-colored charmeuse and silk muslin. The bodice is of draped satin crossed in front and making a "V" decollete. The drapery falls over the arm to make a small sleeve. A point of black Chantilly trims the back of the arm bodice arm-veiling and the back of the bodice. A small rever of white satin trims the neck and holds a point of black velvet which falls to the waist. The belt of the same material is draped and holds in front some long ends of black net. The slightly draped skirt is of charmeuse draped with lemon silk muslin.

INVENTS MACHINE TO TELL IF MAN IS DRUNK

CHICAGO, Sept. 13.—Now comes science with the only guaranteed method of determining whether a man is drunk. It is the "toximeter". It is an invention of a German, Dr. Schweisheimer. With the new meter a scientist can tell not only whether one is drunk, but the degree of intoxication.

MAKE LAYETTE ON ONE PATTERN

Small Gowns Made on Same Principle as Earliest Doll Dresses—Nainsook Best.

There are many mothers who spend an enormous amount of money on the outfit for the baby, but even the greatest of mother love cannot stretch a meager allowance. Where there is a plenty of cash on hand it will save much anxiety as to the layette, and yet there is no reason why a very pretty outfit cannot be obtained with only a small outlay. For instance, patterns used for the tiny dresses and flannel skirts are so simple anyone can use them, and the same pattern answers for the dress and wrapper, with a little adjusting. These small dresses are made on the same principle as the earliest doll dresses of children, when a piece of material is doubled over, an opening cut for the neck, and the sleeves are sloped into the armholes and then sloped out again to the sides and bottom. In making the dress or wrapper, double over twenty-four-inch muslin or flannel and in the center cut an opening four and one-eighth inches across and sloping into a quarter of an inch deep at the deepest point of the lengthwise fold of the material. This needs no gathers, for it is the neck, but it has a half-inch box plait at the front, about two and a half inches in length.

Then, at the outer edge of the material, cut a straight line about three and three-quarter inches from fold for the sleeve. Cut across the material for five inches, rounding well for the armhole, and from this cut a sloping line to the bottom of the skirt, which is the full width of the material. Each little dress is thirty-one inches in length on the lengthwise fold, finished, sloping up slightly, not more than an inch, at the side seams. Allow an inch and a half for the bottom hem. In this way each garment takes sixty-five inches of nainsook or flannel doubled to make thirty-two and one-half inch length. Nainsook can be obtained at fifteen cents a yard, and one and one-half yards of flannel can be had for seventy-five cents.

Now at the back of the little dress, cut eight inches down the lengthwise fold for a vent, face around the neck and down both sides of the vent with half-inch bias fold of the nainsook, and run in bobbin around the neck for the fastening. The front box plait is held in by the facing. Sew up the seams and turn in a French fell. These should be kept as neat and dainty as possible, as thick seams hurt the delicate baby flesh. Make a half-inch hem at the sleeves and hem the bottom.

Make Wrapper Same Way. This is all there is to the baby dress and the wrapper is made in the same way and of the same dimensions, save that it is cut from the neck to the bottom down the front and the edges turned back in a three-eighths-inch hem on each side. The facing is run around the neck and white tape is used at the throat and at three and six inches to hold the wrapper together.

Flannel skirts are cut the same width and length as the tiny dress, but slope to twelve inches across at the under arm seam. The neck opening is six inches across and an inch and a half deep, the shoulder seams are two and one-half inches deep and the arm-holes three inches long and an inch and a half curve to give plenty of room.

The best material for the little dresses, and it is not at all expensive, is English nainsook. A pink or blue outing flannel will answer well for the wrappers. It is well a select a dainty stripe and pink fadec much less than blue.

DR. THOMSON'S EYE TALKS (TALK NO. 174.)

Crooked.

In many cases the first result of wearing compound lenses is a distorted appearance of objects. A door or window may appear wider at the top than at the bottom, or vice versa. A level floor may appear inclined up or down. This is a perfectly natural result and is to be expected. It is a positive evidence that the glasses are correctly fitted. The eyes have been trying for so long to adapt themselves to a defective condition, that normal vision seems strange and unnatural. It only requires perseverance for a few days to overcome this difficulty. Objects gradually take on a natural appearance as the eyes become accustomed to the new condition. We cannot expect to undo in a moment a defect which has been growing for years. With a little time and patience however, there is no focal defect of the eyes which cannot be entirely overcome with lenses.
