Women's War Work

A report of the work completed by the Lipincott Red Cross auxiliary from April 19 to May 17 was made at the meeting held in the parlors of the First Presbyterian church Friday...

"I do not think we need discuss the matter. I should like to be down for a while, if you don't mind."

"Nothing, thank you," she returned. "If you will kindly send me your maid for a few minutes she can do everything I require."

"I will send her to you at once," I replied frigidly, taking the vase of sweet peas, which I still held, away with me.

But before I went to the kitchen to summon Katie I filled the vase with water and put the pretty, fragrant flowers on my dressing table.

"There!" I said defiantly to myself. "She may do as she likes in her own rooms, but the rest of this establishment I shall run as I please."

But even as I spoke there crept over me a sort of half guilty, half resentful feeling, the identical emotion which used to be mine when, as a child, I did some forbidden thing.

Was this a taste of what life with my mother-in-law would be? Was I always to feel thus 'cribbed, cabled and confined'?"

Mrs. Graham Sealed's Ways With Maids. Katie opened the door of the gas oven to cook the potatoes which were baking in it...

"Oh, Missis Graham," Katie's voice was full of pretty pride. "Dose potatoes jost baking lovely. Now I feex dot steak. You tink luncheon too late. Dey come too queeck. Meester Graham, he not say so soon."

"I know, Katie," I soothed, "but you need not broil the steak for a while. Mr. Graham's mother is feeling ill and cannot eat any luncheon now, so we will wait until she has had a little nap..."

"Now wot you tink of dot?" Katie addressed the kitchen walls with vehemence. "Dot lunch no good after a while!"

"Why, that will be very nice, Katie," I said. "The luncheon will not be spoiled after all. I am so glad you have not yet started to broil the steak. Now will you please go to Mrs. Graham's room?"

"I no like to help old sick vimeens," she muttered. "I 'fraid." Across my mind flashed the remembrance of the day when I had first told Katie Dicky's mother was coming to live with us...
