REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

WHY GRACE DRAPER MADE MADGE PROMISE TO STAY UNTIL THE END.

I do not believe that ever in my life can I again have an experience so horrible as that which followed the development of infection in the dagger wound which Grace Draper had inflicted upon herself after her unsuccessful attempt to shoot Dicky.

Against the combined protest of Dicky and Lillian I shared the care of the girl with the trained nurse whom Lillian's forethought had provided and Dicky's money had paid for.

The reason for my presence at her bedside was a curious one. At the close of the third day following the girl's attempt at murder and self-destruction, Lillian came to the door of the room where I was almost recovered from the bullet wound which had so narrowly missed his heart.

"Well, you luxurious loafer," she said to Dicky, "don't you think you have monopolized this girl's time just long enough? Pass him up, Madge, and come play with me for a while."

"I'll have you know, madam," returned Dicky, "that the lady in question is my wife. I have a legal right to her exclusive society, so take her out of this room at your peril."

Lillian stepped forward quickly, took me by the shoulders, and deftly swung me around away from Dicky and pushed me through the door into the hall.

"Ta-ta, darling," she called back, mockingly, "see you later." She closed the door upon the half laughing, half serious anathema which Dicky sent after us.

"Come down the hall into the library," she said, her manner changing as soon as the door was closed.

"I followed her wonderingly. Safe in the beautiful brown-tinted study of Lillian's, in which she had once bravely cleared up all the misunderstanding which lay between us, she faced me, and I saw with surprise that she was struggling with some hidden emotion.

"I am going to die," she said abruptly, "that poor girl in there has been calling for you for an hour. We tried every way we could think of to quiet her, but nothing else would do. She must see you. I imagine she has made up her mind she's going to die and wants to ask your forgiveness or something of that sort."

"I will go to her at once," I said quietly. As I moved toward the door my knees trembled so I could hardly walk.

Lillian came up to me quickly and put her strong arm around me. "It's an outrage," she said vindictively, "if I had my way I'm afraid I'd let her keep on calling you. She has caused you suffering enough without inflicting anything like this on you."

"But I must go, you know, Lillian," I returned, strengthened by the knowledge of her fierce partisanship for me.

"Oh, I know it," she retorted.

SHOTGUN PROTEST FROM GERMAN GOVERNMENT IS NOT CAUSING ANXIETY WASHINGTON, Sept. 29.—The German protest against the use of shotguns by American troops has been received at the state department and an answer soon will be dispatched. Shotguns are used by American troops. It was said Sunday, only as authorized by the accepted rules of war. They are employed in general police work and in guarding prisons, being more desirable for such work than the high powered army rifle because the firing of the latter might result in the death or injury of persons it was not intended to hit. Germany's threat of reprisals is not causing any anxiety among American officials. The Americans hold 100 Germans prisoners to every 19 Americans held in enemy camps.
