CATHOLIC PRIEST ENDORSES DRIVE

Father Bleckmann Tells Why Good Response Should Be Made to U. W. W.

By Rev. John H. Bleckmann, pastor of St. Monica's Catholic church. It is becoming more evident to every thinking mind that services rendered to our army and navy by the Knights of Columbus, Y. M. C. A., the Jewish Welfare, the War Camp Community service, the American Library association, and the Salvation Army, are essentially one and all of a kind, and must, if well rendered, be rendered in the closest cooperation. The best results in the matter of support of these agencies shall be obtained by uniting them in the forthcoming drive and appeal for funds, in order that the spirit of the country in this matter may be shown without distinction of race or religious opinion in support of what is in reality a common service.

Every man, from Prest Wilson down, has endorsed the work of these agencies. It has the hearty endorsement of all the Catholic hierarchy, through the National Catholic War council. No holler call will be made during this war, than the call for funds for the support of these agencies. Their work means not only the care of the bodies of our boys, but it means the salvation of their souls. Their work is absolutely necessary, if America is to come out of this war clean. We will gladly see our boys give up their lives, if necessary, that right may triumph. But we do not intend that they shall suffer the loss of that which is more than life to them, the loss of their souls.

The fact that an armistice and peace are being talked about should not blind us at this moment. If peace were to come tomorrow, we would have to discharge our duties just the same and for some time to come. The boys in the army and navy cannot be discharged immediately after peace is concluded. The boys in France will not be brought home within 24 hours after peace is agreed upon. If peace were declared tomorrow our duty would become all the more imperative. With the thought and the burdens of war lifted from the minds and shoulders of our boys in France, naturally they will look for something to occupy their time.

Work of Different Agencies.

Where shall they find amusement, where shall they spend their idle hours, without danger to their morals, if not in the halls of the Knights of Columbus, or the Y. M. C. A. huts? Many a good mother worries over her boy and wonders if he will return to her knee as clean, as honorable as he left her; she wonders if he is still attending to his religious duties. If she understood the workings of the Knights of Columbus, the Y. M. C. A., or the Jewish Welfare work, she would have no further cause for worry. The secretaries of these societies are every busy among the boys, looking after their needs and their wants. They visit the wards of the sick with a friendly inquiry as to their wants. To the sick Catholic soldier the red badge on the arm, with the letters "K. C." in black ink, tells him, this man is a Catholic, of my own faith. As a result the soldier expresses a wish to see a priest. The priest always calls on him. The mother need only write to the secretary of one of these agencies to be assured that her boy is being looked after.

A Privilege to Help.

It is true, that every true American has done his duty in the way of purchasing Thrift and War Savings stamps. He has gladly given his money to his government, to provide clothing and ammunition and other articles of use in this time of war. He has deemed it a privilege to invest in Liberty bonds. He cheerfully accepts any privation that victory may come to our arms. But let it be understood that no American wants a victory bought at the sacrifice of the morals of the American army.

The apportionment of the fund is just and fair. The agencies all are worthy, all that are recognized, are included, and there can be no reason, no excuse, but only dark hidden motives, for any to refuse to contribute according to their means, or to single out one of the seven agencies as more worthy than the other to become the recipient of their donation. Really none of us has given to the uttermost. Only the brave boys at the front who have given their blood and their lives can make that boast.

We are all Americans, ready to do whatever is in us to do, for the preservation, progress and triumph of our beloved country. We all long for peace. Though the end came tomorrow, we may as well make up our minds that war work shall not continue for years to come. Let us vindicate the judgment of the president and earn a rich blessing for ourselves by joining all hands to make the drive a triumph of united action and this will be a message of encouragement to our soldiers that will be ever sweet to their memory and to our own.

How Splendidly Italy Utilizes Our Loans

BY WOODS HUTCHINSON M. D.

While we naturally think most directly of the money from our War Bonds going to equip and protect the lives of our soldier boys, yet no small share of it goes to the soldiers of our gallant Allies in England, France and Italy. And while it is splendidly used everywhere, nowhere along the whole battlefield is it more skillfully utilized, more economically applied, or returns a heavier interest on the investment than in sunny Italy.

The time which I spent on the Italian Front was one of the most gratifying, most inspiring imaginable. Everywhere was devotion to duty, loyalty, intelligence, efficiency, utter absence of red tape. The Italian army medical and sanitary services rank well up with our own and those of our other Allies, and in some respects surpasses them all. In its victory over dust, camp wastes and flies for instance and its superb care of the wounded. Its most famous surgeons from the great cities were brought right up to and only just behind the firing lines, where protected hospitals were established for immediate operation upon the most desperately wounded. In the brain, the chest, the abdomen, by the very best skill the country could furnish.

In one of them, on the edge of the Carso, presided over by the greatest surgeon in Italy, a man of international reputation, I was standing in the courtyard, looking up toward the Austrian trenches along the edges of the mountains above. Around the hospital grounds was a pole-and-brushwood fence about ten or twelve feet high and as this interfered with my view of the Austrian lines I started to slip through a gap in it. Instantly both the sentry and my officer-guide, called out to me in alarm.

"Look out! Don't go through there." And I found that the field outside was in plain view of the Austrian snipers and they took a shot at everyone who showed himself though up to that time they had not fired on the hospital itself, although their aeroplanes bombed it occasionally at night.

A more ideally beautiful theatre of war could hardly be imagined than the broad green Venetian plain, bounded on the left by the crescentic rampart of the Julian Alps sweeping down to Trieste and the Gulf in front, and by the violet blue waters of the Adriatic on the right. The plain was intersected every three or four miles by the shallow valleys of swift sparring mountain streams, which in the summer-time sank into the earth before they reached the sea, like the rivers of Southern California, and dotted all over with scores of little gray-walled villages and venerable towns, each with its tall white church tower, half-spire, half watch-tower against Moorish and Turkish pirates. Every one of the little villages was swarming with troops and ringed about with camps. And every one had furnished from two to five or six high-vaulted, white-walled rooms for use as hospitals. The result was some most picturesque and striking contrasts.

In one village I saw wounded Ardean and Sardinian Bersaglieri lying in cots with their heads just under the hinged frame of a magnificent painting valued at twenty thousand dollars, with the rest of the equipment on the walls to match. This was in the villa of one of the Italian nobility, and it had other advantages as a hospital besides its beautiful pictures and magnificent furniture. The wife of the nobleman happened to be an Austrian princess and as a consequence, although all the villages and camps round about were scourged time and again by the Austrian fire, not a single shell ever fell upon this villa or in the little village clustered round the foot of the hill on which it stood. German and Austrian gunners may not intentionally shell hospitals but they certainly can intentionally miss them when they want to.

Another romantic illustration of their powers of sparing certain buildings and regions was furnished on this same Italian Front, not twenty miles away from this hospital villa. Right on the crest of one of the highest ridges which the Italian line had wrested from the Austrians after furious fighting, and looking directly down upon the valley of the Isonzo where the armies were locked in mortal combat all summer long, was a little memorial chapel known as Santa Maria Zan. Every village and every church within five miles of it on either side of it and behind was battered into masses of rubble, but its slender tower still rose towards the sky untouched, with not even a slate missing from its roof. The reason given for its singular immunity being that one of the favorite mistresses of the earlier and happier days of the Emperor Franz Josef, was buried there. And as her tomb was plain to be seen just by the side of the altar and no other conceivable reason could be imagined for its escape, the explanation seemed at least fairly probable.

I found another group of wounded soldiers lying in comfortable white cots in the dim religious light of stained glass windows in a beautiful old church, or rather chapel of a monastery. At the other end of the scale, one of the busiest war hospitals which I visited was in an abandoned railway tunnel, drilled through a wall of the cliff-sided gorge of the Isonzo, another was in the entrance to an abandoned mine in the side of Mt. Vodice, but in all of them alike, the wounded had had the very best of attention and were resting as comfortably as their wounds would permit. Two of the most picturesque hospitals that I saw on the Isonzo Front were in great roomy old-fashioned barns and granaries, with the huge roof beams and the under side of the tiles for their only ceiling. But these again had been thoroughly house-cleaned and whitewashed from floor to roof-peak by the Sanita, and in one of them the wounded thought they were in clover and gave themselves great airs of superiority because they were in the hands of the English Red Cross and waited upon by trained women nurses.

The most striking one of the whole series was the great riding school of a big cavalry barracks, which had been converted into a single oval ward over three hundred feet long and with eleven hundred cots arranged in orderly rows upon its floor. As it was over sixty feet high in the center, its spotless white arching roof and delicately tinted walls, with its brilliant light, made it look like a literal temple of light and healing. Though there must have been a fearful business to try and keep it warm in winter-time.
