COLD APPLICATIONS.
The nature of the trouble and the location determines whether hot or cold applications should be used. Generally speaking cold has the opposite effect from heat. Heat localizes the infection, draws it to a head, while the cold scatters the inflammation. Like heat, cold may be used either dry or moist.

Small pieces of ice in bags or rubber or Japanese paper may be used to apply dry cold. Japanese bags are less costly than rubber, but also less durable. Dry cold is frequently used for injuries, as bruises, sprains, bone fractures, hemorrhoids, abscess and so forth. The bag should not be filled more than one-half, and even less ice may be used when weight is to be avoided. After filling a rubber bag see that all the air has been expelled before screwing the stopper on. Then screw the stopper in securely and wrap the bag in a piece of thin linen or gauze before applying it to the part. An ice bag punctures very easily, and for this reason before placing the cracked ice in the bag it is a good thing to run a little cold water over it to round the edges off. When an ice bag is not in use it should be thoroughly dried and put away with enough cotton in it to keep the edges from sticking together.

Cold compresses are frequently used to relieve headache or for fever. Soft pieces of linen or an old-table napkin may be used for cold compresses. Make the compress large enough to cover the forehead, and have at least two, so that one may be cooling while the other is in use. Have a large piece of ice in a basin, soak the compress in the ice, when cool wring dry enough to keep from dripping, and place on the head. As soon as it becomes warm apply the second one in its place. Ice bags are often used on the head instead of cold compresses.

Cold compresses are frequently used for inflammation of the eyes. When there is any discharge the compress should be used at once. When both eyes are being treated separate compresses should be used for each eye. Care must always be taken not to carry the infection from one eye into the other. Have the compress only a little larger than the eye so that it will fit neatly over it. The physician usually gives directions as to how often the compresses are to be changed and when the applications are to be discontinued.

SCORING SUCCESS

Miss Ethel Jennings scored a signal success in the anti-bolshevist drama, "The Red Dawn," by Thomas Dixon, which is starting the new theatrical season at one of the leading New York theaters.

M. N. writes: What are piles, and what can be done to relieve them?
Answer: Piles or hemorrhoids are a dilatation of the veins of the rectum. This condition is frequently due to constipation and will cease to be troublesome if the bowels are properly regulated. This should be done by paying careful attention to diet and by drinking water rather than by cathartics. In severe attacks ice may be applied to the rectum. Some times an ointment composed of five grains of menthol mixed with two tablespoonfuls of vaseline will give relief. However, if the piles are large and persist in giving trouble it is best to see a surgeon and have them removed, which is the only sure cure.

The Horoscope

TUESDAY, AUG. 19.
The planetary configurations ruling on this day point to conflicting conditions and opportunities. While the financial possibilities may be forecast as being very favorable, yet the two most powerful malefics are strongly placed for annoyance, disappointment and disaster. Mars is also evilly disposed, threatening disturbance through rash and impulsive conduct, although this influence is not a powerful one today. Some benefits may be received through dealing with corporations, trusts, other organizations. Avoid change or traveling, and take care of the health. With prudence and cool judgment affairs may be directed to success and prosperity.

Those whose birthday it is may guide their affairs to success and prosperity despite ups and downs. They should avoid change and care for their health. A child born on this day will be generous, and will succeed, although it may be erratic, wayward and impetuous.
