Special to The Times.

Hammond, Ind., Feb. 6. - Despite the feeble attempts of the Hammond and many other citizens to prevent the adoption of the tie-up bill through the house, a general agreement has been reached in the matter which may bring about a major battle in the Indiana General Assembly. The agreement was made by the Hammond politicians and the Indiana Journal, which has editorially endorsed the measure.

Among the modifications which have been suggested is the elimination of the provision that the bill must be passed by a two-thirds majority of each house. This provision is considered by many to be a serious obstacle to the passage of the bill.

The agreement also provides for the creation of a joint committee of the two houses to study the matter and to make recommendations to the legislature. The committee will be composed of members from both Hammond and Valparaiso, and it is expected that the committee will be able to work out a compromise that will be acceptable to both sides.

If a compromise can be reached, it is possible that the bill will be passed by a majority vote in each house, which would be sufficient to override any veto by the governor. However, it is also possible that the bill may be vetoed by the governor, and it is not yet clear what action will be taken.

The Hammond politicians have been working hard to promote the bill, and they are hoping that it will pass. They believe that the bill will be of great benefit to the area, and they are determined to see that it is passed.

The Indiana Journal, which has been a strong supporter of the bill, has editorially endorsed the measure, and it has been widely reported that the Hammond politicians are confident that the bill will be passed.

However, the Hammond politicians have faced some opposition from other groups, and it is not yet clear what the final outcome of the matter will be.
