Winifred Black Writes About: Some Ways of a Widow

Did you see her last week—the Merry Widow? She was here in all the crowds, walking up and down the corridors of the hotels, sitting in all the cafes, at the street corners buying roses—all in black, deep black, from head to foot.

With a crepe veil to her heels, a widow's ruche, a widow's bonnet, a dress so short that it looked like a little girl's high-heeled slippers, silk stockings and an entrancing display of white neck and well rounded arms, seen quite clearly and most becomingly through the shadowy thinness of her gossamer frock!

Blonde she was, and tall, and rixy was she and pink and white, and, oh, so fetching, so alluring, so intriguing!

No! she wasn't some one just made up for the part; she was a widow, a real widow. Her husband had been dead three great, long months, and she was out here looking for a substitute.

She was quite frank about it, she tell me. Every time she heard of a nice, comfortable, middle-aged man, she inquired anxiously, "Is he married?"

Every time she passed in her drives and perambulations a handsome house, surrounded with fine, ample grounds, she said quite naively, "I wonder who lives there. Now, if I could find somebody who would give me a house like that—"

And she likes the town immensely. Oh, immensely. There were so many good looking men here—prosperous don't you know, and well groomed! They looked as if they knew how to take care of a wife.

Oh, she was quite respectable—member of the church and all that kind of thing—and yet b-r-r-r! it makes me shiver to think of her. I wonder if there are many like her in the world? Absolutely cold-blooded, calculating, going out to look for a husband as if they were looking for a cook or a gardener? So much for so much!

Yellow hair, blue eyes, rosy cheeks, a taste in dress, a soft voice, nice white hands and a cooling way of talking. For sale in the Open Market 'Who'll buy? Who'll buy? How long will it be before the

Kitchen Economies

Solving Some Pot-and-Pan Cleaning Problems.

Dishwashing is the most hated job or chore, largely because of the pots and pans. To wash china and glassware is not distasteful. Indeed, some women really like to handle their beautiful pieces of silverware. But when it comes to pots and pans—there's not a good word to be said for that job by any one!

There isn't any way to avoid this task. Not even the dishwashing machines for the home solve the problem. We cannot completely substitute paper for pots and pans, as we can in the case of dishes.

As long long as we must fry and roast and boil, there will be metal pans to clean, and the only way to make the task less disagreeable is to do it very quickly, and make the pans appear battered and worn out before its time. Now, contrary to enameled ware, aluminum need not always be scrubbed with a gritty powder. How much can be done with plain, warm, sudsy water, by way of preserving the newness of such utensils a little longer.

For Various Types Plain soap and warm water should be used to clean all dishes of enamel, agate, porcelain, tin and aluminum. Even iron pans can be cleaned well with plain soap and water, if they are not badly burned, or if just freshly used.

Aluminum should not be cleaned with washing soda, as soda will darken it. Nor should it be scrubbed with a gritty powder. The best way to keep aluminum bright, like new, is to wash it with soap and water.

It responds readily to this treatment. Then once in two weeks, or on silver-cleaning day, shine the aluminum pans with one of the excellent preparations which are available for silver polishing. The average powders that can be used on iron utensils are far too gritty for aluminum and will scratch the surface.

If an iron utensil is badly stained and does not yield to the hot-water-and-soap treatment, boil it in a strong solution of washing soda, then rinse it well, and dry it on a towel. If an iron saucepan or frying pan is to be put away for some time, it is well to rub it with a little fat-minus oil, of course—as this will prevent rusting and cracking.

Knives and Saucapans Steel knives can be cleaned of grease by boiling in a strong soda solution. However, a quicker way is the use of some of the cleaning powders, and many of these are not too gritty to be used on plain, steel knives, although they are too rough for some of the polished metals like nickel, aluminum or brass.

A strong soda solution is made of one pound of washing soda dissolved in four quarts of water. This can be kept bottled, ready for use, and if necessary may be diluted so that it can be used for the finer metals.

Do not polish the metal saucapans too frequently, even if they do lose their brightness. Of course, a shelf of brightly shining, metal, cooking utensils is attractive, but most such articles are plated rather than solid, and the plate wears off with frequent polishing. Today, all of this equipment is extensive. The use of metals like aluminum, during the war period, has diminished its own prestige. Arbitration is urged for quarrels on points of honor and the following penalties are proposed for duelling:

FRENCH DEPUTIES TO PASS ANTI-DUAL LAW

(Cross Atlantic Newspaper Service.) PARIS, Sept. 1.—The duel, which still exists as a regular institution in France, will be made illegal if a bill, which has been brought before the Chamber of Deputies, passes into law. One of its supporters is Gen. de Castelnau, formerly the French Chief of Staff.

The bill sets forth that during the war such great courage was shown by every class of Frenchmen that anyone, who to increase his reputation for courage, provokes or accepts a duel, really diminishes his own prestige. Arbitration is urged for quarrels on points of honor and the following penalties are proposed for duelling:

Refusal of arbitration: Imprisonment from a month to a year and fines from $20 to $200. Wounding adversary: Imprisonment from 2 months to one year, and fines from $40 to $400. Killing adversary: Imprisonment from one year to five years and fines from $200 to $2,000.

Seconds and newspapers publishing reports of duels are also to be liable to penalties.

Science Has Discovered High Prices and Unrest Are Due to Your Glands

BY ARTHUR H. REID.

It was supposed that science would finally get around to the popular game of explaining present social and industrial unrest and confusion, but as large bodies move slowly it has required time for the savants to reach a conclusion. That conclusion is found in a treatise which declares that defective functioning of the thyroid and emotional glands has resulted in an explosive emotionalism beyond the victim's control after constant giving away to excitement and indulgence in emotional excesses.

The doctrine thus advanced would be impressive if it were proved to be a singular manifestation of individual and national disorder peculiar to this particular period. But such is not the case. The entire history of man on this globe is sanctured with just such occurrences as now afflict almost the entire civilized world. Certain causes produce certain results in the body politic, just as certain causes produce certain diseases in the body human.

From the time that the children of Israel had that series of troubles in making their way out of Egyptian slavery and into the Promised Land, human-kind has had its paroxysm in readjustments to new conditions. It will be recalled that so great were the dimensions in this effort on the part of the Creator to establish a new order of existence for man on earth that hardly any of the original designers ever reached the ultimate goal.

If glandular infection has been and still is the seat of human eruptions, revolutions and indisposition to do honest work for an honest living it may be acclaimed as the most universal and prevalent disease known to medical science.

SWEDES WOULD SUPPLY BRAZIL WITH PAPER

RIO DE JANEIRO, Sept. 5.—Representatives of a Swedish company have made proposals to the Brazilian government looking to the establishment of a print paper manufacturing plant in the state of Parana. Among other advantages asked of the government is that of free import of necessary machinery.

According to the company's representatives there is an abundance of necessary material for print paper manufacture in Parana and other states. Local publishers, who have for some months been occupied with problems growing out of the scarcity of high priced imported print paper, are unanimously in favor of the manufacturing project. In the meantime they are meeting frequently to discuss measures of economy at which reduction in the size of newspapers and increased advertising rates and subscription prices were under consideration.
