

DANIELS DROPS 46 NAVY CLERKS OF DRAFT AGE

351 Are Exempted as Needed for Technical Work in Navy.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 21.—Secretary of the Navy Daniels notified the house today that he had asked for exemption for forty-six clerks of draft age employed in the navy department withdrawn.

Secretary Daniels communicated this decision in a report responding to the Madden resolution calling for the heads of all departments to report the number of men of military age in their employ who have been exempted from military service.

The report showed that 408 employees of the navy department of draft age originally were exempted at Secretary Daniels' request. Of these eleven have since enlisted in the navy or the marine corps. With forty-six clerks restored to the draft service lists there will be 351 employees who will be retained by the navy department because, the secretary says, they are technical men whose services to the department is just as important as the service of technical men in the shipyards or navy yards.

"The requests for the exemption of the forty-six clerical employees," Secretary Daniels said in his report, "were made in December, 1917, at which time during the great expansion then taking place it was imperative that the working force should not be disrupted. All of the men on this list have been and still are of the greatest importance in carrying on the work of the navy department.

"Nevertheless, I have felt, in order to carry out the spirit of the draft regulations, I should not retain them any longer on the deferred classification list, even though in so doing it is going to be extremely difficult to replace them."

Of the 351 employees still exempted from service all are classified as expert draftsmen of various kinds, aeronautic mechanical engineers, chemists, laboratory men, structural steel experts, ship designers, electricians, and electrical engineers, inspectors, and other technical craftsmen.

Among the navy department men from the middle west on the exemption list are:

C. C. Wylie, Marietta, Ill.; C. B. Watts, Bloomington, Ind., and William A. Conrad, New Albany, Ind., all listed as chronometer and watch caretakers for the navy, employed in the time service department, and E. R. Bailey, 5463 Dochester avenue, Chicago, an aeronautic mechanical engineer.

Registrants Form Employment Bureau

Registered men of Washington township met at Milton Wednesday evening, and were given an explanation of the reclassification of drafted men by Dr. Squires of the Cambridge City army board.

An employment bureau to aid the men and employers in need of labor was established with Carl Williams in charge of the bureau. Farmers in need of help will be listed, and men registered with the bureau will be assigned those making application for labor.

Wheat fields that should prove desirable for the selection of seed were listed, and volunteers assigned to aid the county agent in inspecting them.

The next meeting of the organization will be held Wednesday evening, July 3.
