THE STRUGGLE

THE CLIMBER'S PASSION

When a small frog has moved from a big pond to a little one, it is likely to put down the change in proportion to an increase in its own size. Whereupon, fired by confidence and ambition, the small frog may start out on a career to make of itself a big frog and succeed even beyond its own expectations.

Lillian Blake, in spite of her no mean proportion of energy, had always been a very small frog in the social clubs and circles which constituted for her the only important element of New York. This was due not so much to her lack of personality as to her passion for social climbing. She reached up as high socially as she could touch with the tips of her fingers and climbed. As a result she found herself the tall-ender in the social roster of a few groups she had climbed to with much effort. She wanted to be a leader—and she was hardly asked to follow. Lillian Blake pined for smaller worlds to conquer.

She met, she saw, she conquered the smaller domain of the Ferrol family. Edith Ferrol had asked her advice, Lillian enthusiastically gave it, and Edith taking it, found it good and asked for more. Lillian not only gave her all the advice she asked, but a great deal more. And much of it was good. Nor was she content with giving advice. She insisted that Edith follow it out to the letter whether she thought well of it or not. Soon advice took on the tone of instruction. Lillian was, in a way, a power at last and she liked the taste of it and wanted more.

When finally Edith refused to follow her leadership, Lillian was outraged. She had magnanimously helped the weaker against the stronger, the woman against the man. For her pains she had been rejected by the weaker. Very well, then. Lillian Blake would show Edith how poorly she would get along without her leadership. If the weak rejected her, Lillian would ally herself with the strong and be a leader there.

She turned her support to John Ferrol—and he appreciated it. He followed her verdict—and incidentally his own—against Edith's when she decided to supplement their income with home baking for the neighbors. Then he took the next step of asking Lillian's advice on another matter. Lillian, campaigning for influence, was careful to give him the advice that he wanted to hear. The result was that John Ferrol began to feel considerable respect and liking for Lillian Blake's intelligence.

Several times in the course of minor disagreements between the Ferrols, John quoted Lillian in support of his point of view against Edith's. Ferrol did not know that the two women were no longer friendly. It was his very belief that Edith still followed Lillian's lead that made him quote the latter as a clinching argument against Edith herself.

To Edith, however, there was intense humiliation in these allusions to Lillian's superior common sense. She guessed what Lillian had done. She felt that her former friend was taking an abominable revenge on her. She was too proud, however, to complain of it before her husband and swallowed Lillian's interferences in silence.

Lillian now had two men, each in his way under her reign—her husband and John Ferrol. Her husband gave in to her in matters of the home out of that gallant good nature toward women that characterizes the American husband. John Ferrol followed her lead not only out of respect for her intelligence, but also because Lillian showed that consciousness of mastery over him which in its first stages piques and interests a man.

With two masculine captives tied to her chariot, Lillian looked about for more. It was at this point that the little, chirky, self-satisfied yet ambitious Arcadia Country Club opened a world for Lillian to conquer. She was now on fire to be the queen of Arcadia society, such as it was, because she wanted the role and scepter. And she wanted to make Edith feel how much alone she would be if she did not acknowledge her as queen.

SUPPORT OF LOAN URGED AT ECONOMY

Prof. E. M. Muncie of Brazil and Mrs. Charles Druitt were speakers Saturday evening at Economy in the Methodist church.

The Sunday school orchestra gave a program of patriotic music before the addresses. Mrs. Clara Igleman gave two solos and Benton Barlow led the audience in singing several songs.

Mrs. Druitt asked for the cooperation of all women in this fourth drive and told in a forcible manner, why it was necessary for every one to buy bonds.

Professor Muncie, who has three boys in the service, told the audience that there is no peace for America now. He urged everyone to help furnish material and supplies so that a successful and lasting peace may be reached in the near future.

A large delegation from Richmond went to Economy in one of the army trucks from the camp here. Several soldiers from the camp were guests of honor at the meeting.

Coming of The Sunbeam

How to Avoid Those Pains and Distress Which so Many Mothers Have Suffered.

Too much cannot be said for a wonderful preparation, familiar to many women as Mother's Friend. It is more effective in its action than all the health rules ever laid down for the guidance of expectant mothers. It is an external application that spreads its influence upon the cords, tendons and muscles of the abdomen, rendering them pliant, and they expand gracefully without that peculiar wrenching strain. The occasion is, therefore, one of unbounded joy and anticipation and too much stress cannot be laid upon the remarkable influence which a mother's happy prenatal disposition has upon the health and fortunes of the generation to come. The pain at the crisis is infinitely less when Mother's Friend is used during the period of expectancy for the muscles expand easier and with less strain when baby is born.

Mother's Friend is for external use only, is entirely safe and may be had of your druggist. It is prepared by the Bradford Regulator Co., 107 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. Write them to mail you their interesting "Motherhood Book." They will send it at once, without charge, and you will find it very helpful. Do not neglect for a single night and morning to apply Mother's Friend according to directions around the bottle, and thereby certify yourself against pain and discomfort.
