surprise to their friends. Her parents are both living, she says. She declared that she was unaware of her husband's bankrupt condition, supposing that he was amply provided with funds. The girl is afraid to send word to her parents of her predicament, knowing that they would severely censure her for her conduct during the past two weeks.

Is a Pretty Girl.

She is loyal to her husband and says that she will remain true to him through all the trouble. The girl is extremely pretty and innocent looking. She says that she supposed it would be all right to live with Muller at the Westcott as she intended to marry him. Mrs. Muller says that her husband's mother resides in Walnut Hills at Cincinnati and is in comfortable circumstances. She is sure that her mother-in-law will help them out of the difficulty. The girl states that she has known Muller for several years, and that he has always borne an excellent reputation. The couple stated while residing at the hotel that they were en route to St. Louis where Muller intended to meet his theatrical company, the Metropolitan Musical company.

Muller will probably be bound over to the circuit court. It is not thought that a charge of adultery will be brought against him. Muller claims that he is a real estate broker.

GREAT LOVE STORIES of HISTORY

By Albert Payson Terhune

Napoleon and Josephine

(Copyright by the Author.)

Napoleon Bonaparte, young, stern, cynical—commander of France's army in Egypt—sat silent in his tent at Cairo. His favorite officer, LeFebvre, stood near, not wishing to break in upon his chief's thoughts. These thoughts, LeFebvre knew, were doubtless of Josephine, the adored wife whom the commander had been forced to leave behind him in France soon after their wedding. Suddenly Bonaparte raised his head and asked in his imperious, rasping voice:

"LeFebvre, what do you suppose Josephine is doing at this moment?"

The officer, more tactful than truthful, answered:

"General, she is weeping and counting the days that must crawl by until your return."

"LeFebvre, you're a fool!" snarled Bonaparte. "At this moment Josephine is riding in the Bois de Boulogne on a white horse and in bad company."

A Widow's Adventures.

Their wedded life was not pleasant. Josephine was not a model wife. Beauharnais tried to divorce her, failed to secure the decree, and for a time separated from her. Later he fell victim to the reign of terror and was beheaded. Josephine herself was sent to prison, but managed to win her freedom. The reign of terror was ending and France was governed by a committee known as the "directory." Josephine became a leader in the decidedly fast social set made up of the directors' relatives and friends. She attracted the notice of Barras, a disreputable politician, who just then was high in power. Soon Barras tired of her. She was past her first youth, her teeth were bad, and she could no longer help him politically. Also she had two children to support. It was at this time that she met Napoleon Bonaparte.

Napoleon, a poor Corsican, had many changes of fortune and at last had risen to local military power under Barras. He was just 27. He was poor, unpopular and lacked the quality of making friends. He had lived the life of a hermit. One day Josephine visited him to thank the young general for the return of her late husband's sword. Napoleon, who knew nothing of women, thought her a vision of loveliness. The ascetic, shy man went mad with love for this somewhat faded widow, who was six years his senior. Josephine was not carried away by the same fervor.

When Napoleon proposed to her she asked Barras' advice. Barras (he says in his memoirs) told her Napoleon had a promising future and advised her to accept him. The couple were married. Napoleon received from Barras the command of the army of Italy and left for the campaign almost at once after his wedding. He was desperate at parting from Josephine and wrote wildly ardent love letters to her all the time he was gone. He conquered Italy in a whirlwind campaign and was sent to Egypt. By this time he had heard that Josephine was consoling herself for his absence by a series of daring flirtations.

Such rumors, as well as news of a political crisis in Paris, sent Bonaparte hurrying back to France before his work in Egypt was finished. Josephine failed to come to meet him on his return. A stormy scene ensued, after which Napoleon seems to have realized how foolish had been his blind love for his flighty wife. Yet the two settled down to a fairly pleasant existence together. Meanwhile Napoleon forced himself to the highest rung of the political ladder. He became first consul and then, in 1804, emperor of France. With his own hands he crowned Josephine. The former creole widow was thus empress of the world's greatest nation. For Napoleon brought nearly every other European country to its knees, browbeat kings, bullied the pope and turned peaceful lands into armed camps. He was the "hold-up man" of Europe; a military genius such as the world had never before known—lawless, invincible.

But he and Josephine had no children. He wished an heir to carry on his own greatness. He also wished to strengthen his position by a royal alliance. So, in 1810, he calmly divorced Josephine and married the Austrian emperor's daughter, Marie Louise. He settled an annual income of $400,000 on Josephine and continued always on friendly terms with her. Josephine won genuine admiration by the patient dignity with which she bore her fall from power. Her misfortune, indeed, awoke such universal pity that her earlier faults were largely forgotten. As an empress she had provoked ridicule. As a forsaken wife she commanded public sympathy and respect.

Napoleon's marvelous luck forsook him soon after he deserted Josephine. Within a few years he was shorn of all his immense power and was a hopeless prisoner on the isle of St. Helena.

CAN A MEDICINE BE A "FAKE"?

that has lived and grown in popularity for thirty years and demonstrated its worth by actual cures of female ills in thousands and thousands of American families? Any fair minded, intelligent person will emphatically answer NO! Such a medicine is Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, and its ever increasing popularity is due to actual merit alone.

Held a Meeting in Washington

Did the State Democratic Leaders Discuss What Attitude They Should Assume Toward Liquor Question.

(Palladium Special) Indianapolis, Ind., Jan. 27.—Mild and unsuspecting democrats of Indiana had an opportunity to see which way the wind is blowing, when the word came back from Washington yesterday that a conference of democrats had been held there for the purpose of discussing the attitude of the party toward the liquor question. This little conference has been the chief topic of discussion today among republicans as well as democrats.

The conference at Washington which was attended by Thomas Honan speaker of the last house of representatives and by all of the democratic congressmen was merely the first apparent result of something that has been developing for some time and that is a wide difference of opinion among the democrats on the question of liquor agitation. Three courses were considered by the men at Washington. One was that the democratic platform should not mention the liquor in any way either directly or indirectly, another was that the platform should declare in general terms against all summary legislation, and a third was that it should declare for the township unit and the $1,000 license law. This last proposition was understood to represent the wishes of the brewers and it is said that at the conference at Washington it was practically decided that this plan should be opposed.

But back here in Indiana it is known that there is still another plan which is being considered and a well known politician gave the advice today that those who wish to keep in touch with the situation should keep their eye on this fourth plan which was not discussed at Washington because he believed that ultimately this was the plan which would be adopted. This plan is to declare for the repeal of the county option law and for a law which will provide for option with the county and incorporated city as a unit. Or it might be the plan would be to declare for the city as the unit without declaring for the repeal of the county option law.

It is the understanding that the brewers will attempt to make this kind of a compromise with the Democratic leaders. The brewers believe that the people of the country should not be allowed to aid in inviting incorporated cities dry because the sentiment in the country is different from what it is in the city. This plan has been discussed much among the Democrats.

The conference at Washington was discussed around the governor's office today and while no direct word came from the governor it is understood from his friends that the governor will oppose any of the plans mentioned at Washington and that he will oppose the plan which has been suggested as a compromise measure. "The governor," said one of his close friends, "believes that the platform should declare for leaving the liquor question to the legislature and I am sure that he will make a fight on this very issue. The governor was not very anxious to dictate in the organization of the democratic state committee, but it will be a different proposition when it comes to drafting a state platform."

But the whole thing illustrates pretty well that there is wide difference of opinion among the democrats on the liquor question. "There are several score of men in Indiana who would be willing to sacrifice their time and interest in order to accept a place as deputy on the state board of accounts," said Mark Thistlethwaite, secretary to the governor, as he looked up from a stack of correspondence about three feet high. Mr. Thistlethwaite has been kept busy filling away applications ever since William M. Fogarty, who was the democratic deputy, resigned. It is understood that the governor has not given up his determination to find a man from the north part of the state if such is possible. Strong pressure is being brought to bear on him from that section of the state because his friends believe he would make a big political mistake if he appointed a man from any other part of the state. Fort Wayne is getting into the race good and strong for the place. State Senator Steve Fleming of Fort Wayne was in conference with the governor yesterday and a short time after he was in. A. M. Schmidt defeated candidate for mayor of Fort Wayne was in. It is understood that Mr. Schmidt will not land the appointment. Senator Fleming is said to be working in the interests of George A. Bittler. W. E. Ranke of Fort Wayne is another candidate who is mentioned for the place.

The delay of the governor in announcing an appointment indicates that he is having some trouble in making up his mind. The fact that Mr. Fogarty had resigned became public before the governor intended that it should and on the next day the governor went to Fort Wayne and it was reported that when he returned he would be ready to announce an appointment at once. However the announcement has not yet been made. It is understood though that the appointment is to be made soon.

A movement has been set on foot in the last few days to pick out a number of high class men for places on the democratic state ticket. This plan has not as yet had the approval of all of the democratic leaders and it is being discussed freely. One of those it is said, who will be greatly interested in the movement to get a high class democratic ticket is Mark

Thistlethwaite, secretary to the governor. If a movement of this kind should go through it would mean that the skills would be put under a number of men who have been mentioned for certain places on the ticket. It is understood that Thomas Honan of Seymour would not be in it for attorney general. Honan is regarded as high class enough all right, and is bright enough and there is nothing against him but there seems to be an idea that he is not old and experienced enough for the place of attorney general. In connection with this new movement Albert Sahn of Indianapolis is talked of for the place of auditor of state and there are some who say that this was in Mr. Sahn's mind recently when he announced that he would not be a candidate for re-election as auditor of Marion county. Mr. Sahn was one of the few democrats elected in Marion county two years ago. He is connected with the State Life Insurance company.

Carl W. Riddick, secretary of the republican state committee was in the city yesterday winding up the affairs of the old state committee so that everything may be turned over to the new committee after it is organized on February 3. The business will be turned over to the new committee, it is said, without a single debt hanging over it. Ten years ago the republican state committee had a debt of several thousand dollars.
