The Anti-Narcotic Law

The anti-narcotic law, a federal statute which has just become effective, has been the death warrant for many an emaciated drug user and it will claim as victims many more men and women.

On the other hand thousands of American mothers as they crouch to sleep their babes are safe in the knowledge that this same stern law stands protectively between their little ones and what was the nation's greatest curse, the drug habit.

One may expect a general epidemic of crime for some time to come, perpetrated by crazed drug fiends who have been deprived of narcotics. Especially there will be noted a decided increase in the number of suicides.

The full horror of the drug curse has been revealed the short time this law has been operative, but this law does not doom all its victims. A large percentage of drug users, who have not developed the habit to an extent that they absolutely require narcotics, will be saved from the awful fate which otherwise would await them.

What Anderson Has Done

In Anderson, Indiana, there is the best example of the desirability of municipally owned public utilities. That city owns the water works plant and enjoys a monopoly on the electric lighting and power business.

Next year the citizens of Richmond will begin to realize what an advantage to them their own electric plant is. With the bonded debt provided for this plant, under a law just enacted, can pay into the city treasury each year, it is estimated, about $18,000 on its present valuation.

These facts are hard ones for the enemies of the municipally owned utilities system to swallow. Incidentally about the only enemies of city owned utilities are those interested in privately owned service corporations.
