TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION: One year by mail, postage paid - $3.00 One month " " " .25 One week, by carrier - .06

For information where to get Thanksgiving and Christmas things consult the advertising columns of THE PALLADIUM. They are an unerring guide to the places where the best goods and best bargains are to be had.

It is now stated that Queen Wilhelmina's illness was precipitated by a violent quarrel with her husband. Duke Henry did not slap her as Alexander did Queen Draga, but he went off on a tantrum and refused to come back until his mother-in-law begged him to return. Verily, there be skeletons in palatial closets.

Let every person, who is able, consider himself or herself a committee of one to see to it that nobody in this community shall be without a Thanksgiving dinner. A Thanksgiving dinner does not necessarily include turkey or any other particular thing, but it does mean something out of the ordinary. It is hard to be duly thankful with an empty stomach.

Ex-Congressman Lorimer of Chicago has sued the Chicago Record-Herald for libel. He asks $100,000 damages. Mr. Lorimer has for a good many years occupied the position of Republican boss in the city by the unsalted sea. Of late the fates have turned against him and his nominations have been unpopular. Now he seems to be more sensitive to newspaper attacks than formerly, and hence the damage suit.

The strike of the switchmen at Pittsburg is a very serious matter to the business interests of the country just now. The roads centering in that city, especially the Pennsylvania, have for some time been taxed to the utmost to handle the freight on their respective lines. This strike will cause a congestion of freight at many points and will seriously embarrass both freight and passenger business. The advance in pay demanded by the strikers is not large and, to an outsider, it looks as if the conflict ought to have been avoided. It is claimed by the strikers that they are simply asking for the same wages in Pittsburg that are paid in Chicago.

HAGERSTOWN.

Harry Cheesman returned to his home in Kansas last week.

Sadie Shaffer attended the wedding of her sister, which took place at New Castle last week.

C. T. Knapp is erecting an addition to his marbleshop 20x27 feet.

Guy Lumpkins, aged 14, was buried last week. His parents reside two miles north of here.

Mrs. Beula Weaver is visiting at Cambridge City.

Edward Lawson of New Castle spent a day visiting last week.

Lewis Kinsey, up in 89 years, is quite sick.

Fred Hastings is running a grocery wagon through the country.

Miss Emma Tector is visiting her sister here. Mrs. Henry Keagy.

Mr. John Roberts of near Centerville, aged 92, visited his daughter, Mrs. E. D. Fox.

Miss Anna Burgess, one of our teachers, was called to Richmond one day last week to attend a funeral.

To the Public.

Allow me to say a few words in praise of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I can recommend it with the utmost confidence. It has done good work for me and will do the same for others. I had a very severe cough and cold and feared I would get pneumonia, but after taking the second dose of this medicine I felt better, three bottles of it cured my cold and the pains in my chest disappeared entirely. I am most respectfully yours for health, RALPH S. MYERS, 64 Thirty-seventh street, Wheeling, W. Va. For sale by A. G. Luken & Co. and W. H. Sudhoff.

Buy your anthracite and soft coal of the Union Ice Co. 19-101

An interesting program has been arranged by Mrs. Stanley Hughes for the Musical club tomorrow afternoon.

AMUSEMENTS.

WHITE SLAVE.

At the Gennett this evening the "White Slave" will be the attraction. The "White Slave" is what can be termed a moral play. The sentiment is lofty, and the struggle of a young girl to guard her chastity against the onslaught of a rascally rone forms the basis of the plot. There is nothing to offend and much to admire in the theme, and, moreover, it is all not only probable, but the same scenes were constantly enacted in real life during the period of slavery. It was the same condition so graphically reflected in "The White Slave" that brought about the war of '61-'65, and it all has the charm of history and as it interested the past generation so will it entertain and enlighten the children. It is vastly superior to the later day productions of the same class, and when properly staged, as it is this season, it can not but renew its triumphs. Special prices 25, 35, 50 75c.

THANKSGIVING PLAY.

Mistress Nell at The Gennett on Thanksgiving will do a fine business. The rush for seats is already great. There is a matinee in the afternoon. The prices are 50 and 75 cents, and seats are reserved as for the night performances. No play ever produced has a record of success equal to that of Mistress Nell. It was originally produced in New York and Henrietta Crossman in the title role and its success was so instantaneous that the limited engagement of three weeks was extended to an entire season. Mistress Nell occupying during last year the Bijou, Savoy and Wallach's theatres in succession.

HORSE SHOW FEATURES.

Unique Decorations at a Famous Gotham Hostelry.

The Waldorf-Astoria hotel in New York, honors the horse show with the most elaborate floral decorations of its history. Proprietor George C. Boldt deputed Florist J. H. Small, who created the flowery fantasies of the Rockefeller wedding, the Mackay and Bradley-Martin balls and the inauguration at Washington, to transmute the big hotel into a bower where beauty and the horse will divide the honors.

The equine symphony's first movement will begin in the pillars and trellis work of the Thirty-fourth street portico, which will be twined with a medley of Florida smilax and incandescent lamps, says the New York Journal. At night the lamps will nestle like fireflies in the ropes of green.

As the visitor swings in his hansom into the driveway he will be confronted with a stately hansom banked in chrysanthemums and palms and yoked to a steed, blue ribboned, fashioned out of 250,000 leucocyan leaves from the forests of South Carolina. This horse was not made in a day. It took three months to build him out of nothing but leaves. He is constructed on the lines of one of last year's winners.

From the pillar capitals in the main lobby will depend facsimiles in flowers of the heads of equine wonders of former shows, each with his appropriate ribbon. Passing from the office to the ladies' reception room, the eye will be challenged by the counterfeit presentation of a horse life size done in Pennsylvania moss. Palms and flowers will flank the bases of the supporting columns of the lobby, and fragrance will be heavy everywhere.

Profuse decorations will delight the senses in the dining rooms, palm gardens, billiard room and cafes. The chrysanthemum in yellow, white and blue will furnish the dominant note, relieved by coils and wreaths of southern smilax and asparagus vines. There will be 60,000 chrysanthemums in evidence, including several hundred Timothy Eatons, which retail at a dollar apiece.

Fresh flowers will garnish the dining rooms every morning, and the menus will be decidedly horsy in getup.

Saw the Joke.

A prominent Bostonian inquired of a London shopkeeper for Hare's "Walks in London." The shopkeeper, after much search, found it on his shelves, but in two volumes.

"Ah," said the Bostonian, "you have your Hare parted in the middle over here."

"What?" queried the Englishman blankly, passing his hands over his hair.

The next day the Bostonian called for another book.

"I'm so glad you returned," said the Englishman. "I want to tell you I see that joke."

Cured.

The following is a Chinese joke: In a certain house there was a baby that annoyed every one by its continual squalling. At last a physician was called in. He administered a bolus of the soothing virtues of which he had a high opinion and offered to pass the night in the house to observe the effects of his remedy. After a few hours, hearing no noise, he exclaimed: "Good! The child is cured!" "Yes," replied the attendant, "the child has indeed stopped crying, but the mother has begun to mourn."

Relieved.

"That must be a pretty bad tooth-ache to swell your face like that. Why don't you see a dentist?" "I did call on your friend, Dr. Pullen, yesterday and experienced great relief."

"You must be mistaken. Pullen has been out of town for a week."

"I know. I felt relieved when I found that out."—Exchange.

HALL CAINE AS A CRITIC

Much Interested In James Creelman's New Book.

TWO SUBJECTS APPEAL TO HIM.

The Maximan Tells What He Thinks About the Pope—"Benevolent Despotism" and Democracy—Disagrees With Tolstoy's Views on Marriage as Reported by Creelman.

Hall Caine has written the following interesting letter, which a friend of his recently sent to the New York World, on socialism, religion and marriage apropos of James Creelman's new book, "On the Great Highway."

GREENE CASTLE, Isle of Man, Nov. 2. I have read with a great deal of pleasure James Creelman's stirring book, "On the Great Highway." The subject of the book deals with are of great interest to me. The first is the pope and his views on social questions. The picture Mr. Creelman presents of his visit to the Vatican is admirably faithful to the atmosphere of the great house as I know it, and the version he gives of the pope's views is not only true to the spirit of the holy father's published encyclicals, but he has caught with quite extraordinary fidelity the tone and manner that are peculiar to the Vatican utterances and especially characteristic of the speeches of his great head.

I confess that with all my reverence for Pope Leo XIII. as a Christian statesman I fail to realize the definite message conveyed in the words Mr. Creelman has given. As in the encyclicals, so here, the church by its honored mouthpieces tells the world that with all the reverence for the definite message conveyed in the words Mr. Creelman has given. As in the encyclicals, so here, the church by its honored mouthpieces tells the world that with all the reverence for the definite message conveyed in the words Mr. Creelman has given. As in the encyclicals, so here, the church by its honored mouthpieces tells the world that with all the reverence for the definite message conveyed in the words Mr. Creelman has given.

For my own poor part, having none of these responsibilities, I do not hesitate to say plainly that the only solution I see of the grave social and economic problems that weigh on the world at present lies in the direction of the triumph of democracy; but this means the downfall of all forms of arrogated authority, even when they come in the guise of a benevolent despotism having its only logical seat on the temporal throne of the sovereign pontiff.

The second of the two subjects which most interest me in Mr. Creelman's suggestive book is Tolstoy and his views of marriage and the social order. There cannot be a more sympathetic and often enthusiastic reader of Tolstoy than myself, but nowhere have I seen the essential wisdom on which his great mind is built more plainly revealed than in these chapters of conversation. Tolstoy has gone further since Mr. Creelman talked with him, and in one of the admirable little books published by The Free Age Press ("The Relation of the Sexes") he says plainly that in his view "marriage is an un-Christian institution," that it is "a sin demanding redemption," and that people should marry in the same way as they die, "only when it is impossible to do otherwise." This at all events is no uncertain note, and if we may take it in relation to Mr. Creelman's book, it is a note of warning as to the quality of logic Mr. Creelman presents Tolstoy as saying that the physical impulses in marriage, like the appetite of hunger, are the expression of a law of nature and therefore neither good nor bad.

Again Mr. Creelman describes Tolstoy as saying, contrary to an essential tenet of Christianity, that human nature is not good. Now, if human nature is good and the impulses in marriage are of nature, how comes it that marriage is "a sin demanding redemption?" Tolstoy's view on the social order, as revealed in Mr. Creelman's book, would appear to me to be equally wanting in the quality of logic. He approves of Bonardet's theory, which requires that every man shall work with his hands to produce the means for his own subsistence, meaning by that that he should till the earth and grow grain to make his own bread. At the same time he admits that the developments of modern civilization, railways, bridges, bridges, telegraphs, the press, universities and all other machinery of social life which has been built up throughout the ages are hastening the day when humanity will be one great family and the Christian law of love and brotherhood will prevail.

Here, surely, is an absolute contradiction. If every man had spent some portion of his time in tilling the earth for his own maintenance, the present order of civilized life could not possibly have come to pass, and if we carry the world back to a condition in which each man tills the soil for his own maintenance, we reduce it to a condition in which the Christian law of universal brotherhood could not have come to pass.

My conclusion (which I advance with all humility against the authority of Tolstoy's great name) is that the laws of nature, whether in the relations of the sexes or of the relations of the classes, are working out the will of God. If they are not doing so, I am compelled to conclude that for 6,000 years the Almighty has been allowing the world to go in the wrong direction under the influence of laws which humanity has been powerless to control. Before I can think that I shall conclude that there is no God in the world at all and put Christianity aside as a painful and cruel delusion, I find the sadness of the world, the mystery of its great burden of sorrow, as perplexing as if it should be to me to stand and abandon faith altogether if I did not feel that on the whole and in the long run and taking the universal view the world is ruled in righteousness.

HALL CAINE.

The Animal Man and the Newborn. If Mr. Thompson Seton chose, he could write a book on his lecturing adventures that might prove as interesting, though in a very different way, as his "Lives of the Hunted," says the New York Commercial Advertiser. Not long ago he was stopped at the theater door by half a dozen ragged boys, one of whom said, "Say, mister, are you de jay dat talks about de animals?" "Yes."

"Well, say, won't you give us a pass?" "How many are there of you?" "Only eleven" (others now appearing).

Mr. Seton called his manager and said:

"Pass these eleven boys."

"Der's eighteen now," said the spokesman.

"All right; pass eighteen," said Mr. Seton.

After his lecture of an hour and a half was over he stepped out of the stage door, and there were the eighteen awaiting as before. Their spokesman once more came forward, and these were his sentiments:

"Say, mister, dat was great! You're no jay; you're a bird—a reg'lar bird!"

Planting Wild Turkeys.

The attempt is being made on some western game preserves to plant the wild turkey. The birds are trapped and their wings slipped. Sometimes they are allowed to breed with the tame birds. The young then show less inclination to wander, but are not so good for purposes of sport and lack the delightful flavor for which the wild ancestor is famous.

Advance in Telegraphy.

The new Hungarian system of telegraphy is a success, says the Baltimore Sun. The system has been installed between Budapest and Flume, a distance of 375 miles, and is in practical working order at a speed of 40,000 words an hour. Messages are written in Roman characters and require no transcription. As a system it is an ingenious combination of the telegraph, the telephone and photography, the messages being written on sensitized paper by ray light and developed and fixed by an automatic process.
