BRUTES GIVEN TO DRINK.
Many Animals Become Intoxicated on Nature's Beverages.

Although it has often been said, when speaking of drunkenness, that even the beasts of the field do not get drunk, it is nevertheless a fact that a great many animals do get intoxicated. Take the elephant, for instance. He is particularly fond of the fruit of the Ungaru tree, and although he appears to have some idea that it is not good for him he will go on eating when he has once begun until he is wildly excited and so intoxicated that he will stagger from side to side. Every now and then he will put himself up, shake his huge head and tear madly through the forest trumpeting at the top of his voice and terrifying every living creature. It is said that he will even dare and defy his most dreaded enemy, the tiger, when in this condition, but we have no means of verifying this. It is well known, however, that an elephant is in a most dangerous condition when suffering from the effects of eating this beautiful fruit and all who can take care to keep out of his way as much as possible.

The sloth bear is another animal given to this falling. The natives of India are in the habit of hanging little vessels on the palm trees for the purpose of catching the juice. This juice is so attractive to the sloth bear that, although such a poor climber, he will scramble up, and go on drinking the juice until he is so drunk that he can only slip helplessly to the ground and lie there in a drunken stupor until the effects have passed off.

But the sloth bear is not the only animal who is so partial to this juice of the palm tree. The curious fruit, or fox, bats (family Pteropodidae) are particularly fond of it. This peculiar little combination of beast and bird, with its foxlike face, reddish furry body and black, uncanny-looking wings, the delicate membrane of which is always quivering down to the very tips, will fly to these vessels in company with some hundreds of his companions and they will suck the juice until the ground below the tree will be dark with the bodies of these bats, who will lie there too helplessly intoxicated to move or defend themselves no matter what may turn up.

The biggest drunkard of all is perhaps the palm civet. So addicted is this animal to the drinking habit that he has been termed the toddy cat. And a more helpless, foolish-looking creature than he is when he is thoroughly intoxicated with the palm juice it would be difficult to find. There are many other animals given to this falling, but all those I have spoken of live in India and it may be that the heat which induces extreme thirst—a frequent excuse among men—is the direct cause of it.—Collier's Weekly.

Too Short to Be Noticeable.
"That awfully little Mr. Shorter proposed to me last night."
"Indeed!"
"Yes. He offered to go down on his knees, but I said I couldn't see that it would make any difference."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Setting Him Right.
Mr. Wabush—I hear your family went south for the winter.
Miss Backday (precise Bostonese)—Not at all. They went south for the absence of winter peculiar to that locality.—Philadelphia Press.

When a woman nudges you with her elbow it is equivalent to saying, "I told you so."
In order to be sure you are right you must go ahead and find out.
