

he wrote to the chairman of the 1904 campaign ordering him not to accept money from Standard Oil.

What is the evidence offered by Archbold in support of his charges?

He swore he gave the $100,000 contribution to Treasurer Bliss in currency, and in the privacy of his own office.

Treasurer Bliss is dead, and cannot answer that charge.

He swore that the only third person ever present when he and Bliss discussed the contribution was H. H. Rogers.

H. H. Rogers is dead, and cannot corroborate or deny that statement.

He swore that Bliss gave him a receipt for the money. He was asked to produce the receipt.

He swore he had been unable to find it.

He only produced one witness to corroborate his testimony.

That witness was Boise Penrose, senator from Pennsylvania, who admits he took $25,000 from Standard Oil in 1904, and who is now under a cloud—a Standard Oil cloud.

John D. Archbold ought to be made to prove his charges against Theodore Roosevelt or sent to jail for perjury and conspiracy against the people of the United States.

ROOMS WERE 'SOF PICKIN'

Mrs. L. Richards, keeper of a rooming house at 432 S. Sangamon, had Mrs. Sadie Phillips hailed into the Desplaines st. court this morning.

Mrs. Richards has 24 rooms in her house. When fire escapes were put on the house the building inspector told her to keep the windows open that border on the escapes.

Residents of the neighborhood soon discovered the open windows. On hot nights some of them crept stealthily up the fire escape and went to sleep in one of Mrs. Richards' vacant rooms. That's the charge against Mrs. Phillips.

Judge Gemmill imposed a fine of $10 and costs.

WORSE AND MORE OF IT.

Judge—Five dollars fine for exceeding the speed limit.

Offender—But I was only going three miles an hour.

Judge—Then it's ten dollars for obstructing the highway.
