Roman in the Life of a Bad Citizen—A Missionary Girl Falls in Love with Him

CHICAGO, March 28.—Dyer Scanlan, one of the most desperate criminals who ever operated in Chicago, has been just released from Joliet after serving ten years and ten months, less the time deducted for good behavior.

Next day Inspector of Police John Bonfield, accompanied by Detectives Ben Williams, William Thorpe, and John Hanley and a squad of patrolmen, surrounded a house on Twenty-second street, near Wentworth avenue, where Scanlan was in hiding.

Fortified himself in a house. Next day Inspector of Police John Bonfield, accompanied by Detectives Ben Williams, William Thorpe, and John Hanley and a squad of patrolmen, surrounded a house on Twenty-second street, near Wentworth avenue, where Scanlan was in hiding.

Roman in the Life of a Thug. But the most interesting part of the matter and the reason this story is told is a romance connected with Scanlan's career at this period.

When Scanlan heard of the fickleness of his betrothed and the peridy of his friend he refused to believe it, and not until a copy of the marriage certificate was shown him would he be convinced.

Swears Vengeance Against Mead. When Scanlan heard of the fickleness of his betrothed and the peridy of his friend he refused to believe it, and not until a copy of the marriage certificate was shown him would he be convinced.

Confessed to Set Another Free. One of these is the murder of Officer O'Brien, committed in 1887. After his incarceration in Joliet Scanlan made a written confession of this murder, and it is now proposed to make him answer for it.

Should he escape from that charge through some technicality of the law there are four other murders for which he will have to answer.
