DOES TANGOING GIVE THE TANGOER THE "TANGO TOE?" DOCS SAY YES—GIRL SAYS NO

Miss Virginia Norden.

New York, Aug. 13.—Whom is one to believe, Virginia Norden or the chiropodists?

The latter, in convention here, have declared that women who indulge in society's latest dance are letting themselves in for a painful affliction known as "tango toe," which is alleged to develop after a few months of tangoing and to cause the unhappy tangoer much torment.

Miss Norden, who made her Broadway debut in "The Poor Little Rich Girl" last winter and who is to have a "lead" in a new production this season, is a tango fiend. She admits it, and she's proud of it. And she says this "tango toe" stuff is all bunk.

"Those corn doctors are just trying to invent another fashionable disease," she declares. "I tango every day of my life. I tango in high-heeled shoes and in tennis slippers, and I have yet to feel a pain in my feet. For one thing, I take care of
