

Zoline, "had such an effect on counsel for the defendants during the trial that they did not dare even to rise to take an exception.

"Judge Anderson during the trial frequently consulted with the attorney for the Erectors' Association and heard suggestions from him privately in the absence of the defendants and their counsel."

Zoline has sent a mass of evidence with which to sustain his charges.

'PHONE GIRL'S NERVE HELPED OUT IN BIG FIRE

The remarkable coolness of a telephone girl who struck to her post and called every guest in the hotel although she was drenched with water probably saved many lives in a fire that broke out at the Hotel Mayer, 12th st. and Wabash av., last evening.

A passer-by saw smoke coming from room 607 and ran into the hotel lobby to sound the warning. Miss Hattie Halt, the telephone girl, was on duty. All the others in the lobby became excited. The girl calmed them.

Then she turned to her switchboard and called the fire department. After that she called every room in the hotel, although the dense smoke that floated down into the lobby choked her and the water from the firemen's hoses felt like a Turkish bath. Every one was saved.

The fire started in room 607 when the wind blew a lace curtain across the gas jet. Loss estimated at $40,000.

MAN FOUND SHOT TO DEATH

With a bullet wound in his chest, an identified man, evidently a foreigner, was found dead in Laffin st., between 44th and 45th sts. early today. A revolver lay 20 feet from the body. The police have not determined whether the revolver victim was murdered or committed suicide.

THREE MEN TAKE ANOTHER "LITTLE ITALY" VICTIM

They "got" another victim in the Italian colony on the West Side at midnight. Louis Milane, wealthy grocer, 1104 W. Taylor st., was shot and killed by three assassins who crouched in ambush for him in front of 745 De Koven st., just a short space from Halsted st.

Milane was still living when passerbys picked him up. He died later, as all the other victims of "Little Italy," with the secret of the shooting in his heart.

Three bullets were fired into his body. As the last shot flamed forth three men, with smoking revolvers, turned and ran from the side of the victim east on Taylor st.

SEEING AHEAD

"So Jessie is going to marry a young oculist? Is he wealthy?"

"Not now, but there's some money in sight for him."
