

ALLIGUYER'S SICK BED ROOM

Not Willing to Permit Brooklyn Man Slightest Chance to Escape.

While Albert J. Alliguyer, shot in the Market Square street battle of Oct. 4, lies in a critical condition at St. Anthony's hospital, the authorities are guarding against his possible departure from the hospital without leaving a forwarding address.

It was said today that a guard will be stationed in Alliguyer's room each night for some time, and he is charged with the responsibility of guarding not only against Alliguyer's departure, but also keeping him from unofficial influences. The guard was established by Sheriff John Miller and is being held on the job at the request of St. Anthony's Attorney Ben S. Bell. "We don't anticipate that Alliguyer will be able to leave the hospital unaccompanied, if he ever is able to leave," said Mr. Bell, "but we have established the guard as a matter of extreme precaution. Alliguyer was an innocent spectator when the shooting started, and we will be only too willing to have this proved."

Alliguyer is conceded only a slight chance to recover. One of the bullets which struck him is still imbedded in his lung, and has resisted all attempts to extract it.

Alliguyer, who claims Brooklyn, N. Y., as his home, had been questioned by H. S. Mosher, chief in charge of Attorney General Edward J. Brundage's investigation of crime and vice in Rock Island county, and by other officials from time to time, as his condition permitted. It is understood that Alliguyer has steadfastly clung to his original statement that he was watching the scoreboard in front of the Argus plant when the shooting started, and was drawn into the range of the bullets by the excitement of the moment. However, it is known that evidence seeking to connect him with the defendants held for the killing of John Looney, Jr., is being investigated. The trail already has led several hundred miles from Rock Island.

If Alliguyer develops any immediate signs of death, it is understood that the investigators will attempt to gain a dying statement from him. It is recognized that in extreme situations, man is more likely to make a clean breast of things.

Investigation Continues.

In the meantime numerous witnesses continue to respond to the summons of Mr. Mosher at the court house. Charges of graft in official and unofficial circles mark the course of the investigation at this stage. Nearly all witnesses are being requested to sign stenographic reports of their disclosures.

There were no new developments in the proposed perjury case against Edith Ortell today. It is understood that the authorities incline to the belief that a strong case of perjury could be worked up against the star witness in the Landretto divorce case, based on statements she made from the witness stand to the effect that she had never known Mrs. Lizzie Landretto, and in fact had never seen her until the start of the trial.

Mrs. Landretto in her testimony made sweeping allegations against Edith Ortell and the rest of Rock Island's underworld, declaring that when she was first brought to Rock Island she was harbored at the Ortell place on Second avenue and Fifteenth street. To all of this Mrs. Ortell entered a blanket denial.

ASSESSOR MAKING HIS REVALUATION OF REAL ESTATE

Albert E. Nelson, township assessor, is already at work making revaluations of real estate in anticipation of the receipt of the tax books from the county treasurer next April.

He is making personal visitations and expects to continue his work until the receipt of the books when he will check up on his valuations upon which the tax levy for 1923 will be based. This work is generally performed by at least three deputies, the assessor proposing to save this annual expense by performing the task himself. By the time the books are received he says he will have completed his revaluation of real estate.

The rest of the work will merely be a matter of making entries of the revaluations upon the books. The advantage of this method, he stated, in addition to the saving of money, will be that when called upon by the board of review to explain any revaluation he will be able to inform that body that he visited the property in question personally and not through the mediation of a deputy.

VALENTINO AT CAPITOL.

By E. C. Fisher.

Rodolph Valentino, first as a college hero and then as a gorgeous young prince of India, is the treat you have at the Capitol theatre for the first half of the week, in his latest Paramount picture, "The Young Rajah." The story was adapted by Juna Mathias from John Ames Mitchell's popular novel, "Amos Judd," and the play of the same name by Alvin Karpis. According to the story, Valentino is a Hindu prince, who, as a child, is smuggled out of India to save his life and is brought to America and placed under the care of a New England family. The boy grows up and becomes an athletic hero at Harvard. His love affair with a young heiress is broken off when he is suddenly kidnapped by emissaries from India and taken back to his native land. A usurper has seized the throne there, and Valentino, now back in the garb of an Indian prince, ousts him. Out of a sense of duty toward his people he is about to sacrifice his love for the American girl, but a series of unexpected happiness brings things out happily.

"WHILE SATAN SLEEPS."

By Malcolm H. Eddy.

Janings for the much maligned "minister's son" are had in "While Satan Sleeps," at the Spencer Square starting yesterday. Handsome Jack Holt is in the leading role, and he has excellent support from Sylvia Ashton, Mabel Van Buren, Betty Francisco and very little Fritz Brantje. It's a western story without bechapped cowboys or loose gunplay, which alone ought to recommend it.

NANOOK OF THE NORTH.

By Fern Hawks.

If you are heartily tired of human triangles, chorus girl plots and sob stories, then see "Nanook of the North," which runs this week at the Fort Armstrong. If you aren't as refreshed by the story as you would be by a cooling rain after a hot, unbearable day, then you don't appreciate good pictures.

Nanook is an Eskimo. The film, which is genuinely thrilling, gives you glimpses of the daily, year-round life of Nanook, great hunter, his wife, Nyla, the smiling one, and their little Eskimos. It sounds like one of those so-called educational films. While it's probably the most instructive film shown for many moons, it's also one of the most entertaining.

A wonderful thing about the film is that the cast is not made up of stars used to playing before the camera. Their acting, however, does credit to many so-called stars of the silver screen. They are the real (not reel) residents of the northland. The man who braved the cold and ice to give the world a story of their home life says they are the most cheerful, happy-go-lucky people in the world. Although they seem to be ever on the search for food, ever battling the elements, they appear to live up to his description.

The scenery is wonderful, the photography beyond description. When one realizes that a lone man, with a lone camera, went into a land where the people were unused to the ways of civilization, and came back with a picture like Nanook, it's almost unbelievable. There's all kinds of action in the picture. To see Nanook land (or whatever they call it) a seal is as thrilling as watching a desperate struggle on the gridiron. And he gets as many bumps as the roughest player in the lineup.

Every school child should see Nanook. They can learn more about the ways of the Eskimos by seeing the film than by scanning yards of printed matter. The film is especially for youngsters, however, for old, young and those who claim to be neither, can all find amusement and entertainment in it.

Before seeing the film one has the idea that the Eskimo is sort of a dull being, not quite human, who sleeps six months out of the year, and chews blubber the other six. After seeing it you have a fixed idea that they are just as human as any one of the millions of queer beings that inhabit the world. They work and play, laugh and love. Not everyone would care to be an Eskimo, however, after seeing Nyla chew her husband's sealskin boots each morning in order to make them pliable. Nor would they care to live on the menu offered in the Eskimo home. And speaking of homes, you can see them build one.

There doesn't seem to be anything to kick about in Nanook. From the time you get introduced to each member of the family until you leave them tucked up for the night in a cozy snow igloo, the wind howling outside, you are most interested and enthused about the family, the home and the country.

Wim Rogers provided the comedy. In a film called "The Robin Hood," he gives some remarkable exhibitions of work with a rope. In fact, several ropes. He lets his lasso down on everything from a horse and rider to a mouse that amays in the wee small hours of the night. He is a good roper and dragging to death his rival in a love affair, and just as the rope has ascended on his own neck to put him in a condition where he can never swing a lasso again, he is

DECLARES COAL SUPPLY SOLVED

National Chamber of Commerce Head Says Fuel Situation Has Been Stabilized.

According to a communication received by the Rock Island Chamber of Commerce from the national organization, the fuel situation has become stabilized to such an extent that surveys and reports by member associations are no longer necessary. The program adopted in September to equalize coal distribution through cooperation among users in the period immediately following the strike has been successful.

Julius H. Barnes, president of the national chamber, writes that "the movement of coal for shipment via the Great Lakes to the northwest has now reached the point that guarantees adequate supplies before the close of navigation, and the resumption of large-scale industries such as steel plants and the relatively high operation of other plants shows that industrial coal is adequately distributed."

"The domestic user," Mr. Barnes states, is "fairly assured of domestic supplies, although individual preferences as to kind and description may not always be met and may require some substitution of other kinds."

It is his claim that the menacing situation arising out of the five months' suspension of production has been met and solved, and he quotes the federal fuel administration's average spot prices on all grades of coal, stating that while the price for the week ending Sept. 23 was $5.98, the price for the week ending Nov. 4 was $4.19; showing a gradual descending scale.

USE ROCK ISLAND FOR EXAMPLE OF LOW LIVING COST

Rock Island is one of 41 towns and smaller cities of a total population of 1,400,000, or an average population of 35,000, mentioned in Edward Mott Woolley in the current issue of the Saturday Evening Post as communities in which the lot of the inhabitants is declared to be 30 percent better than in metropolitan communities.

The only other Illinois city referred to by Mr. Woolley is Bloomington. Most of the towns named range from 12,000 to 40,000 in population.

Statistics are collected which give the volume of business done by merchants, as well as the average salaries of bank officers, factory clerks, stenographers and other lines of endeavor, the conclusion of the author being that the small town is best not only for married people but for those who are in business for themselves. "Stores from the 41 towns indicate," says the author, "that men gave a better chance in such communities."
