Aged Man Killed by Train.—Speeding at the rate of 40 miles an hour an eastbound Rock Island passenger train struck and instantly killed Fred Lucht, 419 Davis street, at 7:30 o'clock yesterday morning. The body was carried on the pilot of the engine for nearly a block. The body was horribly mangled, both legs being broken below the knees and both arms fractured. The head was also badly crushed where the couple of the engine struck. Many women in a street car near the track witnessed the tragedy and as the mangled body was born across the street on the pilot of the speeding engine, the women covered their eyes with their hands to conceal the horrible sight. The body was removed to the Runge undertaking parlors where it will be held preceding the inquest and funeral. The man is survived by a wife and three daughters.

RARE STATUARY IN RAIL STATION

The picture shows one of the six Saint-Gaudens statues which are being placed over the entrance to Washington's union station where they will be seen by the hundreds of thousands of visitors to the city. These statues weigh about 25 tons each and are the largest that have ever been cut from one block of stone. The raising of this statuary will mark the culmination of plans for a symbolic facade worthy to stand at the entrance to the national capital, which were formulated by the late President Cassatt of the Pennsylvania railroad and Dr. Charles Eliot, former president of Harvard, who selected the inscriptions which will appear beneath them. The statue shown in the picture is that of Thales and represents electricity.

He is in the Moline city hospital. A nasty wound extends across his forehead. With other workmen Crawford was preparing to finish an excavation when sand began to move, causing the destruction of the braces and the precipitation of Crawford into the hole. Greek Starts Fight.—An unknown Greek, who afterward escaped in the shuffle, unwittingly started a free-for-all battle Sunday evening when he brushed against George Fitzpatrick. Fitzpatrick was with a gang of fellows and a fight started at once. Result in police court was the fining of Fitzpatrick for disorderly conduct, and Gust Sottis, a Greek, for carrying concealed weapons. The unknown alien stopped in front of the Angelo Harris restaurant at 1224 Third avenue, to gaze with longing eyes at the display of fruits in the window. It was then that the fight started. Fitzpatrick—brushed by the Greek—attacking him. Harris rushed to the rescue of his mauled fellow countryman, as did Gust Sottis. Police were called and upon arrival they found Sottis and Fitzpatrick, both bearing unmistakable signs of the fight. They were taken to the station. Mrs. Stella Mars, restaurant employe, was a complainant in the case. She declared that she had been dropped to the floor by a blow from the first one of the battlers. When Sottis was searched at the station, a 32-caliber revolver was found up his sleeve. He afterward said that he was waiting to get in the cell with Fitzpatrick so that he might kill his friend's assailant.
