The war is teaching us thrift and economy in many ways; and we shall have much more to learn along those lines before it is over. The extravagance of the people of the United States has become notorious. We waste in thousands of ways, one of which is in the destruction of paper. We might learn from Canada how to save paper. The school children of Canada have been taught to save old newspapers and every scrap of paper that comes into their homes. In Winnipeg the children of one district saved and turned in to the Red Cross Society 5 and one-half tons of paper in one day. Through the use of collecting boxes in Ottawa the Daughters of the Empire are getting thirty-five tons a month. All of this paper is used again. It goes back to the paper mills, is sorted, and is used in making building papers, boxboard, roofing felts and pastboards thus relieving the shortage of raw materials and helping keep down the prices.

The campaign for saving paper in Canada is managed by the Dominion Conservation Commission, which sends out circulars, puts up posters, and advertises in the newspapers. There has been some agitation along this line in this country, but the people here have not taken the situation seriously, as in Canada.—Star.
