A surprise party was held at Mr. John Allman's in the night of the 8, which was about sixty persons, from four different counties. The party was enlivened by the music of two violins and on organ. His new house was put to good use until the rising of the sun warned the merry makers that it was time to disperse.

Designs for Cheep Houses.

In the March issue of Carpentry and Building there is commenced the publication of a series of designs of houses costing from 1,000 to 2,000 each to build. Several months will be required to present all the designs that have been secured for the purpose, and the variety that will be shown, it is believed, will rank this series above anything else ever tained through two competitions in which trees. It requires no great amount of liberal cash prizes were offered, and in- figuring to see that the planting of these clude the work of architects in every part of the country. Each design is accompanied by a brief specification of construction and a detailed estimate of cost.

Matt Zimmerman Caught in Utah

A Cheyenne, Wyoming, dispatch of last Wednesday relates the capture of Matt Zimmerman, the cowboy desperado, strong's, on the Smoky, yesterday, on in Utah last Monday. He has been delivered to the Nebraska authorities, and is awaiting identification and the execution of the death sentence.

Zimmerman is a young man, but his record is a startling one. Seven years ago, when he was but nineteen, he raided to Colorado. She expects to remain there the ranches in Hitchcock county, Nebraska, in company with Courtney Belmont, a young Mexican, and stole a big band of ponies. With those they rode toward the east, and were soon followed by Sheriff Jack Woods and a motley posse of men and boys. Near the hamlet of Minden, in Kearney county, the stolen ponies were found at pasture on the prairie, and while his men were busy securing them, Woods and one deputy rode into town to look for the thieves. They found them at supper at the "Prairie Home." Woods, without much thought of resistance, went to the door of the during room, gun in hand, and sung out for the desperadoes to surrender. Quick as a flash, Belmont, who had his pistol on his lap, made a snap shot, and poor Woods fell dead. Zimmerman, with an equally quick shot, winged the deputy, and then both rushed for the door. As they were leaving the room they fired another volley, as if to intimidate any one from fol-Easter Sunday, April 21, in the court lowing them, and R. B. Kelley, a guest room of the new court house. Public who was trying to get his wife stowed away out of danger, was killed.

On the porch they met John Collins, a mail carrier, who had just driven up, and deliberately shooting him down, they rode off toward the Kausas line. There was a general turn out in pursuit, and even the state militia was ordered to join in the hunt.

A week later, in the early part of No vember, 1882. Belmont was killed in what was then called Kansas county, in Kansas, near the southwest corner of the state, at a place called the Point of Rocks, by Charles C. Fouts, of Trego county, Kansas. The thieving raids of Belmont and Zimmerman included trips through Trego, Graham, Norton and other counties in northwest Kansas. In one of these raids a valuable trotting horse was stolen from the Fouts premises, in the merman was completely unnerved by his partner's death, and his capture was easily effected.

He was taken back to Minder, tried that, as Sheriff Woods had no warrant, Belmont and Zimmerman were justified in resisting the arrest.

A second trial was had, and again conviction followed, and the death sentence was imposed. Again the supreme court reversed the findings.

Zimmerman was again taken before Gastin, the same judge. For the third time he was found guilty, and sentenced to be hauged. The usual appeal to the supreme court was taken, and while it was pending the prisoner's lawyer hit upon a novel method of securing his client's release. He succeeded in convincing a United States commissioner that he had the right, pending the hearing, to -J. W. Kerns had good cause to feel admit Zimmerman to bail. He fixed the his case has been decided against him by -The delivery of trees to applicants at the supreme court, and the chances of his being hung are quite promising.
