UNION LECTURE COURSE.

Third Season, 1900-1901, a Stronger Course Than Ever.

An examination of the list of talent announced in the advertising columns of this issue will convince the patrons of the union lecture course that the management has secured an exceedingly attractive series of lectures and entertainments for the coming season. The cost of the course last year was $300 more than was paid the first season and this year nearly $300 more will be paid than last. According to the first announcement made when the union course was organized, the surplus from one season is used in improving the quality of the next year's course, and the liberal patronage which has been given for two seasons enables the committee in charge to begin the season with a balance of over $200 and to offer this splendid array of lectures and entertainments. The price of season tickets will remain $2 and of single admission 50 cents. The method of reserving seats will be the same as that of last year, which was fair to all and quite satisfactory. Tickets will be on sale Monday, October 22, at the usual places. On Saturday, October 27, Monday, October 29, Tuesday, October 30, between 2 and 3 o'clock holders of season tickets will draw numbers for choice of seats. On Friday, November 2, beginning at 2 o'clock, reserved seat checks for the first three numbers may be obtained at the High School building. The first lecture will be given Monday, November 5, by Fraulein Annie Stolle of Boston, who will show her reproductions in the familiar scenes of famous European paintings.

Princeton, N. J., Oct. 20.—The commemoration day exercises of the 164th year of the founding of the university were held today before a very large audience. The board of trustees and faculty led by President Patton, Secretary of State John Hay and Bishop Henry Yates Satterlee, of Washington, marched in a body to the hall. President Patton made an introductory address in which he announced that at the meeting of the trustees yesterday, action was taken by the board to elect some distinguished graduate to further the movement of establishing a graduate department. An election to this office will be made later on. He also announced that a new officer will be elected to be known as the university secretary. President Patton presented the need of a gymnasium and urged the concerted action of the alumni towards securing the necessary funds for its erection. Commenting upon the action granting the alumni representation in electing trustees, he said that the most important announcement he had ever made since he became president of the university.

Bishop Satterlee delivered an address on "The ethics of American civilization," in which he stated that the government of the United States had developed imperialistic tendencies.

ELECTION WORRY.

Problems Developed by the Coming Political Contest.

Attorney-General Godard Is Kept Busy.

ANSWERS QUESTIONS.

Gives His Opinions Concerning Most Trivial Matters.

Northern Kansas Voters Who Lose Their Votes.

Every mail brings to the department some disputed question concerning the rights of voters, questions which are decided every two years by an attorney general and upon which there seems to be dawning little light, even as time goes on.

One man desires to know if, living in the country, it is necessary for him to register in order to vote. This is such a simple question that, were it not for the sincerity of the letter, it would have not been answered, but the attorney general wrote a very careful letter, explaining the law upon this proposition.

The question of the age of voters seems to be an important one. This relates principally to young men who attain their majority within a few days of the election, namely those who were born on or before the 7th day of November in 1879, will be permitted to vote this year. Those having birthday anniversaries later than that date can not this year avail themselves of the privilege of their first opportunity as citizens to cast a vote.

This decision does not apply particularly to this year, but that is the law as it has been laid down by the courts and will govern in the absence of legislation to the contrary.

In one of the northern Kansas counties a colony of settlers went to Manitoba. All their property was sold in Kansas and they went to the new country, took land and settled with the intention of maintaining their future residence in that country. They reached the state in September and the question arose as to the possibility of a voter in that county being someone at that time. The attorney general holds that these people lost their suffrage rights in Kansas by going away from the state without the intention of returning at a new home and that it will be necessary for them to comply with the provisions of the constitution regarding the loss of rights in the state and thirty days in the county.

The intention of the voter to make a new home, to abandon the home in this state, is responsible for the loss of these votes.

Another ante-election problem comes from southern Kansas where the heads of families of voters, therein, have taken claims in Oklahoma. In many instances these men have their names on the rolls in Kansas and will not do so until after the election. Where a man does not exercise his prerogatives as a settler in the new country until after the election, where he has not given up these rights in Kansas permanently, he does not lose a vote. But when a man abandons his Kansas home and settles on a claim in Oklahoma with the intention of completing his residence there at once and leaves his family to follow, he loses a vote in Kansas. Where a man makes but a temporary sojourn in the territory, maintaining his residence in his home state, he is entitled to be cast in the Kansas election.

A large number of requests for official information from the attorney general come from southern Kansas and touch upon this one proposition in determining which that official is required to ascertain the intention of the voter, which of course governs his right to vote. The biennial controversy concerning the rights of college students to vote in the towns where they attend school, rises again and it will probably continue to rise in all its future developed timeliness until the end of time.

The rule which has been laid down in this case is to the effect that where a student who is a voter, in leaving home to attend school, expects to return to town where he goes, or any other town or place where he can obtain employment either during or after the school term, he is not a voter in the town where he starts out to make a new home wherever his hat may be taken off, such student has a right to follow the usual procedure in his home within the legal requirements of residence or citizenship. Where students stay in a town only during the school term, returning there after to their respective homes, they have no right to vote in the town where the school may be located. These four propositions to which the foregoing has referred constitute the principal demand for information. One man who will be 21 on the morning of November 11, was told he could not vote this year. He lives in Jewell county and writes that he has been told there that he could vote by saying he was 21, "as his time was so short no difference would be made."

OFFICIAL "HOT-AIR."

Chairman Albaugh Announces That the Fight is Over. Although Chairman Albaugh of the Republican state committee admits privately that the returns from persons engaged in polling the voting precincts in Kansas are incomplete and not satisfactory, and never reliable, he has prepared for publication tomorrow an official statement.

This proclamation will be a guess at the result in Kansas, in which the chairman forecasts a Republican victory by majorities ranging from 20,000 to 30,000. The chairman does not admit that there is likely to be a difference in the returns which none of the other politicians denies, but sees only promise of victory by figures increased compared with two years ago.

There will be regular installments of these "hot-air" documents until the election is over. The first is being issued, after consultation on the part of the campaign managers, the chairman being anxious to please everybody.
