DENTISTRY.

GEO. F. ASHTON, D. D. S., DENTIST. N. W. corner Eighth and Kansas avenues, Topeka, Kansas.

SILVER trumpets sounded a flourish, and the javelin men came pacing down Tregarrick Fore street, with the sheriff's coach swinging behind them, its panels splendid with fresh blue paint and florid blazonry. It's wheels were picked out with yellow, and this scheme of the color extended to the coachman and the two lackeys, who held on at the back by leathern straps. Within the coach and facing the horses sat two judges of the crown court and Nisi Prius, both in scarlet, with full wigs and little round patches of black plaster, like ventilators, on top; facing their lordships sat Sir Felix Felix-Williams, the sheriff, in a tightish uniform of the yeomanry with a great shako nodding on his knees and a chaplain bolt upright by his side. Behind trooped a rabble of loafers and small boys, who shouted, "Who bleeds brass?" till the lackeys' calves itched with indignation.

I was standing in the archway of the lackhorse inn, among the maids and stable boys gathered to see the pageant pass on its way to bear the Assize sermon.

At the moment when the trumpets rang out, a very old woman, in a blue camel cloak, came hobbling out of a grocer's shop some twenty yards up the pavement, and tottered down ahead of the procession as fast as her decrepit legs would move. There was no occasion for hurrying to avoid the crowd, but she went by the Packhorse doorway as if swift horsemen were after her, clutching the camel cloak across her bosom, glancing over her shoulder and working her lips inaudibly. I could not help remarking the position of her right arm. She held it bent exactly as though she held an infant to her old breast, and shielded it while she ran.

A few paces beyond the inn door she halted on the edge of the curb, flung another look up the street, and darted across the roadway. There stood a little shop—a watchmaker's—just opposite, and next to the shop a small ope with one dingy window over it. She vanished up the passage, at the entrance of which I was still staring idly, when, half a minute later, a skinny trembling hand appeared at the window and drew down the blind.

"Who is that old woman?" I asked, touching Caleb, the head hostler, on the shoulder. "What woman?" "She in the blue cloak, d'ee mean?" "An old, ancient, wisht-lookin' body?" "Yes."

"A timmersome woman, like?" "That's it." "Cordley Pinsent, widow of old Key Pinsent, that was tailor to all the grandees in the county so far back as I can mind. I can just mind Key Pinsent—a great, red, rory-cuntury chap, with a high stock and a wig like King George—my royal patron' he called 'em, havin' by some means got leave to hoist the king's arms over his door. Such mighty portly manners, too. Oh, very spacious, I assure 'ee! Simme I can see the old Trojan now, with his white weskit bulgin' out across his doorway like a shopfront hung wi' jewels. Gout killed 'em. I went to his buryin'; such a stretch of experience does a young man get by the time he reaches my age. God bless your heart alive, I can mind when they were hung for forgery!"

"Who were hung?" "People," he answered, vaguely, "and young Willie Pinsent."

"This woman's son?" "Aye, her son—her ewe-lamb of a child. 'Tis very seldom brought up

same rooms you see—and then she stealer as a mouse an' took to needle-work, plain an' fancy, for a lot o' the gentry's wives round the neighborhood befriended her, though they had to be sly an' hide that they meant it for a favor, or she'd ha' snapped their heads off. An' all the while she was teachin' her boy and tellin' 'em what-ever happened, to remember he was a gentleman, an' lovin' 'em with all the strength of a desolate woman.

"This Willie Pinsent was a comely boy, too; handsome as old Key, an' quick at his books. He'd a bold, masterful way, bein' proud as ever his mother was, an' well knowin' there wasn't his match in Tregarrick for headwork. Such a beautiful hand he wrote! When he was barely turned sixteen they gave 'em a place in Gregory's bank—Wilkins an' Gregory it was in those aged times. He still lived home wi' his mother, rentin' a room extra out of his earnings and turnin' one of the bedrooms into a parlor. That's the very room you're lookin' at. And when any father in Tregarrick had a bone to pick with his sons he'd advise 'em to take example by young Pinsent, 'so clever and good, too, there was no tellin' what he mightn't come to in time."

"Well—a well, to cut it short, the lad was too clever. It came out, after, that he'd took to bettin his employers' money agen the rich men up at the Royal exchange. An' the upshot was that one evenin' while he was drinkin' tea with his mother in his lovin', light-hearted way, in walks a brace o' constables an' says, 'William Pinsent, young chap, I arrest thee upon a charge o' counterfeitin' old Gregory's handwritin' which is a hangin' matter!'"

"An' now, sir, comes the curious part o' the tale; for, if you'll believe me, this poor woman wouldn't listen to it—wouldn't hear a word o' 'What! my son Willie, she fumes, hot as Lucifer. 'My son Willie a forger; my boy that I have nursed an' reared up, an' studied, markin' all his pretty takin' ways, since he learned to ora-writ! Gentleman, she says, standin' up an' facin' 'em down, 'what mother knows her son, if not I give you my word it's all a mistake.'"

"Aye, an' she would have it no other. While her son was havin' his trial in jail, she walked the streets with her head high, scornin' the folk as passed."

"But her greatest freak was seen when the Assizes came. Sir, she wouldn't even go to the trial. She disdained it. An' when that mornin' the judges had driven by her window, same as they drove to-day, what d'ee think she did?"

"She began to lay the cloth up in the parlor yonder, an' there set out the rarest meal, ready for her boy. There was meats, roasted chickens, an' a tongue, an' a great ham. There was cheese cakes that she made after a little secret of her own, an' a bowl of junket, an inch deep in cream, that bein' his pet dish, an' all kinds o' knick-knacks, wi' grapes an' peaches an' apricots, an' decanters o' wine, white an' red. Aye, sir, there was even crackers for mother an' son to pull together, with scraps o' poetry inside. An' flowers—the table was bloomin' with flowers. For weeks she'd been a plannin' it, an' all the forenoon she touched about that table, givin' it a touch here an' a touch there, an' takin' a step back to see how beautiful it looked. An' then, as the day wore on, she pulled a chair over by the window, an' sat down an' waited."

"In those days a capital trial was kept up till late into the night, if need were. By an' by she called up her little servin' gal that was then, (she's a gran'mother now), an' sent her down to the courthouse to learn how far the trial had got, an' run back with the news."

"Down runs Selina Mary, an' back with word: 'They're a-stummin' up,' says she. 'Then Mrs. Pinsent went an' lit eight candles. Four she set 'pon the table an' four 'pon the mantel shelf. You could see the blaze out in the street, an' the room lit up, wi' the flowers, an' fruit, an' shinin' glasses. 'So the poor woman sat a while longer an' then she calls: 'Selina Mary, run down agen, an' as he comes out, tell 'em to hurry. They must be finished by now.' 'The maid was gone twenty minutes this time. The evenin' was hot an' the window open; an' now all the town that wasn't listenin' to the trial was gathered in front, gazin' curiously at the woman inside. She was titivatin' the table for the fiftieth time, an' touchin' up the flowers that had drooped a bit i' the bowls. 'But after twenty minutes Selina Mary came runnin' up the street, an' fetched her breath at the front door, and went up stairs slowly and 'pon tip-toe. Her face at the parlor door was white as paper; an' while she stood there the voices of the crowd outside began to take all one tone, and beat into the room like the sound o' waves 'pon a beach. 'Oh, missis,' she begins. 'Have they finished?' 'The poor cheald was only able to nod. 'Then, where's Willie? Why isn't he here?' 'Oh, missis, they're going to hang 'em!' 'Mrs. Pinsent moved across the room and gave her a little push out into the street. Not a word did she say, but shut the door 'pon her, very gentlelike. Then she went back and pulled the blind down slowly. The crowd outside watched her do it. Her manner was quite ordinary. They stood there for a minute or so, an' behind the blind the eight candles went out, one by one. By the time the judges passed homeward, 'twas all dark, only the blind showin' white by the street lamp opposite. Froze that year to this she has pulled it down whenever a judge drives by."

same rooms you see—and then she stealer as a mouse an' took to needle-work, plain an' fancy, for a lot o' the gentry's wives round the neighborhood befriended her, though they had to be sly an' hide that they meant it for a favor, or she'd ha' snapped their heads off.
