

JONES ON SILVER.

The Nevada Senator Gives His Views on the Remonetization of Silver—Policy of the Treasury Criticized.

WASHINGTON, May 14.—In continuation of his remarks in the Senate yesterday on the Silver bill, Senator Jones, of Nevada, opposed the idea of redeeming treasury notes in bullion on the ground that when they were so redeemed the monetary circulation would be contracted and the putting of bullion on the market would not make up to the country for the loss of money from circulation. He expressed entire confidence in the honesty of purpose and conscientiousness of motive of the present Secretary of the Treasury, but said that as none of the Secretaries, for twelve years past, had coined a dollar of silver more than compelled by law to do, future Secretaries might conscientiously deem it their duty to keep in circulation the least possible amount of the proposed treasury notes, and thus the United States Treasury might, in effect, become a purchasing agent for the East India company or for syndicates of English merchants wanting bullion cheap in order to make their payments to India. Gold, by reason of its greater value, notwithstanding all the legislation in its favor, could never become the common money medium of the world. A gold coin that would represent an average day's labor would be too small for convenient handling. Silver was the money metal best suited to the mass of the people and to the variety and character of transactions constituting the interchange of daily life. If there were any conceivable necessity for the demonetization of either metal, why, he asked, demonetize that which promised the greater and more steady yield? If for any reason society should decide that one of them should be discarded, should it not rather be that one which promised the smaller future yield than that which promised the larger? It was absolutely vital to the welfare of society that both silver and gold should be in full and unlimited use as money and equally invested with the power of legal tender.

In conclusion, Mr. Jones said: "I predict, Mr. President, that the restoration of silver to its birthright will mark an epoch in the history of this Republic. It will place in circulation an amount of money commensurate with our increasing population. It will give assurance to our languishing industries that the volume of our circulating medium is not to continue shrinking and that the tendency of prices shall no longer be downward. It will increase the wages of labor and the prices of the products of labor; it will reduce the price of bonds and other forms of money futures; it will lighten, but not inequitable, the burden of mortgages; it will increase largely, though not unjustly, the debt paying and tax paying power of the people. It will loosen the grasp of the creditor from the neck of the debtor. By the remonetization of silver, money will cease to be the object of commerce and will again become its beneficent instrument. Activity will replace stagnation; movement will supplant inertia; courage will banish fear; confidence will dispel doubt; hope will supersede despair. The lifting up of silver to its rightful place by the side of gold will set in motion all the latent energies of the people. It will banish involuntary idleness by putting every willing man to work. It will revive business and reanimate the heart and hope of the masses. Capital, no longer fearing a fall in prices, will turn into productive avenues. The hoards of money lying idle in the money vaults will come out to bless and enrich alike their owners and the community at large; while the millions of dollars now invested at low interest in gilt edged securities will seek more profitable investment in the busy field of industry where they will be utilized in the payment of wages and the consequent dissemination of comfort and happiness among the people.

"And this it will accomplish, not for the United States alone, but for civilization, for it is not too much to say, Mr. President, that upon the decision of this question depend consequences more momentous than that of any other question of public policy within the memory of this generation. In a broader sense than any other question attracting the general attention of mankind it is a question of civilization. It embodies the hopes and aspirations of our race. The act of Congress which shall happily solve it will constitute a decree of emancipation as veritable as any that ever freed serf from thralldom, but more universal in its application. It will proclaim the freedom of the white race the world over; it will lift the bowed head of labor; it will hush the threnody of toil; it will inaugurate the true renaissance—a renaissance of prosperity without which industry, learning, science, literature and art are but apples of Sodom."

In answer to questions Mr. Jones said that if there was a free coinage of silver he believed that in three days the silver not used for coinage would be worth $1.20 an ounce and that there it would remain.

Stanley Vexed.

LONDON, May 14.—Mr. Henry M. Stanley, in an interview regarding the German movements in Africa, said that he was wearied by England's apathy and pliancy in regard to the operations being carried on by the Germans. If England continued to remain inactive the Germans would secure paramount influence in Africa, following advice given by himself.

TRUE TO HIS WORD.

A Good Story Told by Prof. Eichberg of One of His Pupils.

Giving advice is one thing, and feeling the effects of having it followed is quite another thing. Prof. Julius Eichberg, the well-known violinist, says that he once had as a pupil a promising little fellow of some eight years, who would not study. As the boy was about to set out with his family for the country, where they were to pass the summer, Mr. Eichberg asked him what he should do there.

"Oh," said the boy, "I shall play and pick flowers and have a good time."

"Yes, but suppose you made up your mind to get up an hour earlier every morning to practice? You would still have time for sport, and in the fall you would be able to play those sonatas you admire."

The result of the conversation was that Otto flung himself upon the neck of his teacher, of whom he was very fond, and promised to do what was asked of him.

A few weeks later, as Mr. Eichberg was driving through the mountains with his family, he was one day delayed, so that the hotel where they were to pass the night was reached at a late hour of the evening.

The accommodations were poor, and the night was warm, and it was near morning before the travelers fairly got to sleep, and it seemed to Mr. Eichberg that he had scarcely closed his eyes before he was aroused by the doleful sound of a violin in a room overhead, where some one was at work upon an exercise with which the listener was only too familiar.

For an interminable hour he tossed about, hoping that the noise would cease; then he rose and dressed, and hastened to the office of the hotel to protest.

"Yes it is something of a nuisance," the clerk answered, coolly, "but we are used to it here. The boy has played every morning this summer, and it was in the bargain when they took the rooms that he should be allowed to do it."

It was evidently of no use to complain to the clerk, and Mr. Eichberg relieved his mind by declaring that he should at least like to see the player of the violin.

"Oh, you can see him if you want to," the clerk said. "He has just come down-stairs. You will find him outside there."

Away hurried the guest, the more irritated by the way in which his remonstrance had been received, and before the door on the lawn stood a trim little lad with his face turned away.

"Are you the boy," demanded Mr. Eichberg, sternly, "that has been making such a noise on the violin for an hour?"

The boy turned and looked at him, at first with an expression of fright; then, with a cry of joyous recognition, little Otto flung himself impulsively into his teacher's arms.

"Oh, my dear Mr. Eichberg!" he cried, "I am so glad to see you! I have got up and played every morning just as I promised!"—Youth's Companion.

Progress.

It is very important in this age of vast material progress that a remedy be pleasing to the taste and to the eye, easily taken, acceptable to the stomach and healthy in its nature and effects. Possessing these qualities, Syrup of Figs is the one perfect laxative and most gentle diuretic known.

Decay, the Universal Law.

Let anything in nature become lifeless and inactive and decay follows as a usual sequence. Decay is the universal law. Can you wonder when a person feels constantly worn out and more than half dead, that decay of the lungs or kidneys sets in. They say that decay of the lungs (consumption) and decay of the kidneys (Bright's disease) is incurable. Who says so? Only those experimental doctors who have failed. Don't despair. While there's life, there's hope! In checking decay of the lungs or kidneys, in preventing further ulceration, it is essential that all blood impurities should be removed, and an alterative influence exerted upon the whole system. The appetite and digestion must both be improved. The nervous system soothed, and sleep, nature's sweet restorer, invited and encouraged. Energy must be aroused and mental depression banished. In this momentous rallying effort Dr. John Bull's Sarsaparilla is an essential ally to nature. Use this remedy. It has restored many to health and strength, even after doctors had given up all hope.

Our Hannah Jane.

Our Hannah Jane was thin and weak. A steady wiper of tears, she was often thought—and thought with pain, "We soon must lose our Hannah Jane." With change of doctors, change of air, she sought for healing everywhere. And when her hopes were almost past "Favorite Prescription" tried at last. It gave us joy, it gave us hope. She ceased to pine, she ceased to moan. (Pierce's remedies are sure and true) Now Hannah Jane is as good as new.

They tell a good story of a man who has a fondness for fast horses. A year or two ago he had one that was said to be a "flyer," and had marvelous stories were told of what she had done, and was capable of doing. But an intimate friend noticed that the owner of the wonderful horse never staked any money on her. "Why don't you back her for a good, round sum, if she can do what you claim she can?" he asked.
