Plan to Select Your Seed

Too little importance is placed upon the value of seed selection from the field. This is particularly true with the grain sorghums. I believe there is little work on the farm that will pay better returns for the time spent than field selection and proper subsequent care of the grain sorghums.

Seed Should Be Pure—It is not uncommon to see from two to four different varieties and mixtures of sorghums growing in a kafir field. Such conditions are very noticeable this season as much of the seed was shipped in. Mixing the seed is very liable to occur where the entire crop is run through a threshing machine.

Select Early Heads—Early maturing strains are most desirable for Western Kansas conditions therefore select heads that ripen early. It is well to mark these heads so they can be identified later at gathering time.

Seed With High Vitality Essential—The cause of a poor stand of kafir or milo is many times the result of using seed weak in vitality. In order to get seed that will give a high germination test it should be fully matured and gathered before frost and stored in the head in a dry place.

It is preferable to select good heads that have been produced under average conditions as to stand, moisture and soil, rather than the largest heads that may have been produced under especially favored conditions.

Choose compact heads uniform in size, taken from stalks that are uniform in height.

Gather a Good Supply—Judging from the experience of the past there is no better practice than to have at least two years supply of seed ahead then if there is a crop failure you don't have to begin all over again by getting seed from a distance.

If the greatest success is to be attained with the grain sorghum crop more attention must be paid to the selection and use of home grown seed. The practice of using seed that has been produced under more favorable conditions is entirely too common. I recently visited a farm where the owner had selected his kafir seed for several years and his field of kafir was remarkably uniform in height and ripening. This is more than can be said of many kafir fields this season.

the opportunity for selection is so good.

The Way of the Transgressor

Just fifty years years ago last June Charles Schmidt, then a young contractor, newly married, folded his arms and looked up smiling at the massive stone walls of the Lansing penitentiary and whispered to himself: "Well done."

He said "Well Done!" because he had been awarded the contract and had successfully carried the work through. It was a good job and others had told him so. He smiled because he remembered the girl wife at home—for they were yet on their honeymoon, and the money he would receive for that piece of work would go far toward making them happy in a home of their own.

Work came without solicitation then. Charles Schmidt's name had gone out over the state as the "kid contractor" and men of longer experience envied him. The "excellent piece of work on the prison walls made him popular. Always when talking of the work he referred to it as the "job that gave him his start."

Two years later a little pleasure trip was taken down to Lansing that the wife might for the first time see the "job that brought success." The baby Arthur they had named him—clapped his hands and muttered baby talk when they returned home and tried to tell him of what they seem. The father and mother imagined it to be words of praise for the great, strong walls his father had built.

Arthur grew into manhood. All his life his father had asked him to some day go to Lansing and see the walls. He explained what they had meant to himself and Mrs. Schmidt were married.

Today a tall sunburned young man stepped from the train to the depot platform here. Around one wrist was a handcuff. At his side walked a stern looking man with a black sombrero.

"Git in here," said the big man and they rode away.

At the gates of the prison the young man looked up at the walls. His eyes were red. His shoulders shook and he said: "They had always wanted me to see it, but they never thought it would be like this."

The sheriff pushed him on. He walked, trembling into the warden's office. As a guard began measuring him for his prison suit the youth moved toward a barred window and gazed down past the massive stone prison walls.

"What's he in for?" grumbled the prison secretary.

"Selling liquor in Winfield," returned the sheriff.

"How long'd he git," asked the secretary.

"Four years," returned the sheriff.

"Say, you kid," growled the secretary again, while the boy still stood looking past the monster walls, "what's yer name?"

"Arthur Schmidt," said the boy.

Then he was led away down a corridor, far from the places where the real light of day gets in, to pay for his sin behind stone walls—the ones that his father had built and which had sent him on the road to success just fifty years ago—Leavenworth Times.

A Nervous Woman Finds Relief From Suffering.

Women who suffer from extreme nervousness, often endure much suffering before finding any relief.

Mrs. Joseph Snyder, of Tiffin, O., had such an experience, regarding which she says: "Six months I was bedfast with nervous prostration. I had sinking spells, a cold, clammy feeling,—could not stand the slightest noise. At times I would almost fly to pieces; stomach very weak. My husband insisted on my taking Dr. Miles' Nervine, and I began to improve before I had finished the first bottle until I was entirely cured."

Many remedies are recommended for diseases of the nervous system that fail to produce results because they do not reach the seat of the trouble. Dr. Miles' Nervine has proven its value in such cases so many times that it is unnecessary to make claims for it. You can prove its merits for yourself by getting a bottle of your druggist, who will return the price if you receive no benefit.

MRS. JOSEPH SNYDER, 262 Hudson St., Tiffin, Ohio.

On Sunday morning Mrs. Steinberger will leave for nearly a week's visit in Topeka with relatives and friends and will take in the State Fair.

Miss Blanche Gorrell left for Miltonvale, Tuesday morning, where she will visit with her sister, Mrs. Osborn Kirby, until time to resume her studies at the Agricultural College.
