

Turkish Customs.

Many of the Sultan's subjects believe he rules the world, and that he places the rulers over the different people, or that it is done only with his permission.

Turkish justice is peculiar. A man was condemned to be hanged in the Valley of Jehoshaphat. He was placed on a horse, with a rope around his neck attached to the limb of a tree. The Pasha demanded twenty thousand piastres as his pardon price—$300. The man was a fellow and the sum was great.

In the administration of justice, plain and defendant are generally both naked; hence Arabs have a wholesome fear of the courts. A large-hair saloon in the Bazaar is an orderly assembly compared to a Turkish hall of justice. Not one at a time, but half a dozen together, in the order of speech.

Once in two or three years the Sultan instructs the Pasha to draft soldiers for the army. This is considered the Pasha's most profitable privilege. If a thousand men are required, he drafts two or three times that number, and allows those to go free who pay for it—the thousand being generally without means.

During and after the drafting there is animation throughout the country; much going to and fro between the town and village; anxiety in the faces of fellows, and weeping of their women. Often the poor fellow brings up in vain his lone sheep or goat as the price of freedom. He has a horror of the army, and makes extraordinary efforts to keep out of it, running to all the kindred of his tribe in quest of money or cattle. Occasionally an eye is put out or a finger cut off to escape the requisition.

In the almost unknown country east of the Jordan, the draft is not enforced. There the wilder and more warlike Bedouins defy the Pasha and his eight hundred or thousand soldiers with their lions—lions. Nor had it been enforced in the southern country about Petra until Young Turkey took the reins of government. He headed the movement in person, and returned to the holy city crowned with laurels, his admirers proclaiming him another Mohammed Ali—"The Arab at Home," by Albert Dodge, in May Galaxy.

By a squall in Delaware Bay last week, while sailing in a yacht, two young men were overtaken. At Nanareth church, on Twelfth street, Philadelphia, at public worship they had occasionally been present. From the way they looked, the capizing of their shallop was very nearly inevitable.

"Bill," said one to the other, "this is serious business; can you pray?"

"No, I can't; I've heard Joe Quinn do it, and I've listened to Bill Post; but I can't do it myself."

"Well, you can sing a hymn, can't you?" "For God's sake do something."

"No, I can't sing here. How can I sing when this boat at any moment may drown us both?"

"Well, we must do something religious. If you can't pray and can't sing let's take up a collection."

To this Bill consented. In his companion's hat he deposited thirteen pennies, a corker and a broken bladed knife. As he did this the wind lulled and the shallop made a successful landing.

SEEK not to please the world, but your own conscience. The man who has a feeling within him that he has done his duty upon every occasion is far happier than he who hangs upon the smile of the great, or still more the favors of the multitude.

A good conscience is better than two witnesses—it will consume grief as the sun dissolves ice. It is a spring when you are thirsty, a staff when you are weary, a screen when the sun burns, and a pillow in death.

There appears very short, eternity near, and a great name either in or after life, together with all earthly pleasures and profits, but an empty bubble a deluding dream.—Brained.

If God is our guide, he will be our guard; he always protects when he leads.

The following is the way they call out figures of a "reel" in Georgia: "Dance to the gall with the yellow shawl; now down outside and up the middle; turn to your partner, Isaac Snaab; and now to that entire stranger; stretch to the right and left; ra de ta, da de de; now to Peter Switshald's daughter; turn your partner, every one; set to the girl with flaring hair; balance one and spin about to the girl with the hair in the heel of her stocking."

JOHN BILLINGS says: "There is one thing in a man that looks like wisdom—they don't kackle much till they have laid their eggs. Sun phinks are always bragging and a kackling what they are going to do beforehand."

TEA, with a slice of lemon in it, is said to be very nice.

Old Times.
The wife of President John Adams was born in 1774, and she says of her youth: "Female education in the best families went no further than writing and arithmetic, in some few rare instances music and dancing." When the Boston schools were reorganized in 1790, girls were admitted during the summer months only, when there were not boys enough to fill them."

Be particular in the choice of your companions; they should be spiritual, holy, self-denying believers; if they are not, they will injure you by their spirit and example.
