BEE NOTES.

Greek honey ranks ahead of all others. Excellent wine and vinegar can be made from honey. Italian bees may be distinguished by their three yellow bands.

Lack of ventilation is the cause of dampness in many hives. More bees are lost by wintering than by disease or in any other way.

When colonies begin to breed rapidly, supplies will disappear as if by magic. The best stock build up the earliest, swarm first and are the best to gather honey.

The honey of the bees of Malta is celebrated for purity and delicate flavor. Swarming is an important factor in the production of comb honey in perfection.

It is said that colic produced by eating honey may be cured by eating a small piece of cheese. Frames of sealed honey can be given on any warm day to colonies that seem likely to fall short.

Bees will ball their own queen just as quickly as a strange one when she has sting poison on her. Canded honey is popular in the English retail markets, where it is bought in slices in preference to fluid honey.

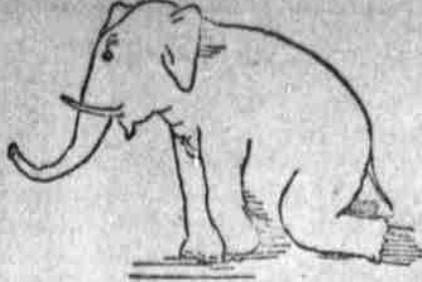

If the bees have been wintered well there will be no need for them to curtail brood-rearing on account of shortage of supplies. It is said that the nameless bee disease can be prevented by watering the bees at home and adding a little salt to the water.

There are 4,500 different species of what are popularly known as wild bees, of which 3,200 are found in North and South America. The beauty of the comb produced and the honey-gathering qualities of the bee are more important than a bee which is pleasing to the eye.

Producers who ship honey, extracted or comb, should endeavor to prevent leakage, which is a loss to all concerned and an injury to the trade. Extracted honey requires less skill, but there is more profit in producing the best white comb, for which there is always a demand, and which never suffers from competition with a cheap counterfeit.

In Russia bees are said to winter well in the open air, in spite of the severe cold, when the harvest is good, but after a bad season losses are disastrous. The great requisite for successful wintering there seems to be good food.

A chemical analysis of honey shows that while nectar of flowers undergoes certain chemical changes in the stomach of the bee, no such change occurs after honey is deposited in the comb. Much water, however, remains to be evaporated by hive heat and the fanning of the bees, and experiments in evaporating by solar heat under glass promises good results.

A wonderful event. In such a state of civilization as ours, where merit is sure to be acknowledged, is it a wonder the factory of Dr. Fenner is worked to its fullest capacity to supply the medicines that are called, after such acknowledgments as the following come to be known: Wm. Farquay, Stevens Station, Ind., writes: 'Dr. Fenner's Kidney and Backache Cure has cured a man here with kidney and bladder disease whom the best physicians had given up. He is now well and sound. It is regarded here as a most wonderful event. His medicines are all good and give great satisfaction.'

Choose Pigs With Black Feet.

Robert Young read a paper at a Missouri institute, in which he said: The Log for the breeding pen is an entirely different thing from the hog for the pork barrel; that is, the hog that is fat enough for pork is too fat for a breeder, and a hog in a condition for breeding is too lean for pork and lard. At six months of age select those which you wish to keep for breeders by following directions given, and, if possible, select the pigs with solid black feet, as this in the hog as well as in the horse, denotes a strong constitution. Continue to feed the breeders as before mentioned. Pen those you intend for market, and give them all the corn they will eat, and at the end of three months they are ready for market. By this time they should weigh, on an average, 275 pounds, and will sell, on account of being smooth and plump, for top price, and net the feeder a handsome profit. The idea of raising a hog and 'puttin' him up to fatten after he is big enough' is bankrupting the farmers of this country, and yet we hear the very men who preach this doctrine say, 'We know more about farming than half those institute fellers, and we haven't got time to read the nonsense of the agricultural papers.'

Horse Shoeing.

Horse shoeing was introduced into England by William the Conqueror in 1066, and has ever since been regarded as a necessity. Of late years, however, the desirability of doing away with it entirely has been strongly advocated, and there are hundreds of unshod horses used in London over pavements of stone, wood and asphalt. It has, however, been found necessary to continue to protect the feet where there is danger of slipping; hence the custom of roughening or sharpening the shoes, which prevails all over the world. This custom existed as far back as the thirteenth century, when we learn, the horseshoes were turned up at heels, which were sharpened, or chisel-shaped, just as we do in the nineteenth century, showing that in some branches we have made little or no progress.
