An accident happened at the gas works Tuesday night which came near proving fatal to James Harvie, colored, an old and experienced employe of the establishment. The pressure put upon the gas caused the water to blow out of the purifying box, and together with an assistant he went into the purifying room to remedy the matter, when the gas, which was escaping rapidly, overcame him and he fell on the floor. The man who was with him became frightened, ran out and called for assistance, and before he could be gotten out life was almost extinct. He was finally resuscitated and is now all right. During the time occupied in saving Harvie, a sufficient quantity of gas escaped to cause the lights all over the city to go out. Unfortunately for the company, the anti-gas meeting was in session at the Court House at the time, and it gave the speakers material for their gas.

The Sandloters held a meeting Saturday night, and invited a number of friends to meet with them and enjoy a grand banquet which they supposed had been prepared for their consumption. But after spending a couple of hours in pleasant conversation and social games of euchre they discovered that the member who was to prepare the feast was out of the city, and their appetites would not be appeased with quail on toast, fried oysters, etc., and they went away exceeding sorrowful for they had anticipated a good square meal, and had been fasting for several days in order to do it full justice. It was the twentieth marriage anniversary of the member who was to set the feast, a unique set of tinware had been provided as a present for him, and the orator of the club had been instructed to load up with the best speech he could manufacture and had burnt the midnight oil in its construction and rehearsal before his mirror, but when the terrible announcement was made that no supper was in waiting the presents were savagely pocketed, the orator mournfully folded up his manuscript, and each one silently marched out into the night, with the same thought that the Dutchman walloped his son for having.

Mr. Geo. W. Reock and Miss Mary E. Loyd were married at the residence of the bride's mother, in this city, Thursday afternoon, by Elder George Darsie.

A little child of Henry White, colored, who lives on the hill above the Arsenal, was terribly scalded Saturday morning, about the feet and legs, by a kettle of hot water being overturned on it. It was standing by the stove when one of the legs came out, the stove tilted over, and the kettle fell off.

If Catarrh has destroyed your sense of smell and hearing, Hall's Catarrh Cure will cure you. 75 cents per bottle. Druggist sell it.

We have just received of Messrs. D. J. Lake & Co., of Philadelphia, one of their Atlases of this county. It is a very complete and valuable work, containing maps of each precinct in the county, showing locations of county roads and residences of farmers; of the city by wards and voting precincts; outline plan of the county; table of distances and population of the county; map of Kentucky and Tennessee; outline and railroad map of the United States and statistical tables of valuable information. It is exceedingly handy as a book of reference and should be in every house. The agents are now engaged in delivering it to the subscribers in this city and county.

The residence of Maj. R. C. Williams, on the hill overlooking the city, on the southwest, known both as the old Major and Harlin place, was destroyed by fire Saturday morning. The fire broke out about eleven o'clock, at which time Maj. Williams and wife were both from home, and there was no one on the premises except a colored family who lived in an outhouse. Nothing was saved except a few articles of furniture. The fire is supposed to have originated from a brick being burned out of a chimney and the flames communicating through the aperture to the woodwork of a closet. There was $1,700 insurance on the house but nothing on the furniture.

Score Tom One.

We clip the following from a letter written from this city to the Courier-Journal:

It was only yesterday that your correspondent met in town two of our most responsible and truthful citizens, namely, Col. Isaac Wingate and ex-Representative Tom Scott, both of Woodlake, this county—informally discussing the incidents of a recent fishing excursion on South Elkhorn Creek, near the residence of the latter gentleman. Said Mr. Scott to Col. Wingate: "Don't you remember that catfish you caught and threw out on the bank?" "Yes; what of it?" "Well, the next evening, just about twenty-six hours after you threw him out there, my little boy and I went down to the creek to catch a mess of 'red eyes,' when my son picked up that same fish, lying right where you left it, and it was still alive!" It is a common practice among our bass fishermen to throw away, as in this case, the blue cats. They are not valued as a table fish, and are rarely "strung." Knowing both these gentlemen to be above suspicion, I have no hesitancy in indorsing their story as absolutely true, notwithstanding its fishy smell.
