THE Buena Vista Freestone Works near Vanceburg were totally destroyed by fire last Wednesday. The Vanceburg Courier says: "These works were the most extensive of the kind in the country, and employed a very large force of men who, for the present at least, are thrown out of employment. Art Reception.

Mrs. Jennie Clarke's art studio, in one of the rooms of the Christian Church, presented an attractive scene last Saturday, the occasion of her first art reception. A large number of our citizens took advantage of the opportunity afforded them, and were cordially welcomed by Mrs. Clarke. They were well repaid for their visit. The work of her pupils, some fifteen or twenty in number, for the past month or so had been tastefully arranged in the front room of the studio. The display of drawings and of the paintings in oil and pastel, the work of herself and her pupils, was a splendid one, and certainly deserved the flattering comments heard on every hand from the visitors. The progress of her pupils must be most gratifying to Mrs. Clarke as well as to their many friends. Mrs. Clarke displays most praiseworthy zeal in her work, and she is meeting with well-merited success in her school.

A Novel Game of Chess.

A rather novel game of chess took place last week between some of the crack players of this city and Mayslick. The game was played by telephone, the crowd at this end of the line having their headquarters at the public library. Each move on the board had to be telephoned to the players at Mayslick, who would in turn telephone their move back to this city. It was an exciting contest. The game began at 10 o'clock Saturday morning and closed about 10 o'clock that night. It is hardly necessary to add that victory perched upon the banners of the Maysville veterans. It is a difficult matter to down them when it comes to a game of chess. Those who participated in the game are: Messrs. Andrew Fox, Jacob Riley, Colonel May and Dr. Wheatley, of Mayslick, and Messrs. E. L. Worthington, J. F. Barbour, F. H. Bierbower, C. J. Hall, Hiram Mendell, L. W. Galbraith and H. E. Pogue, Jr., of this city.

Frosted Tobacco.

The Western Tobacco Journal, of Cincinnati, says: "There has been a good deal of gratuitous advice given planters in the last few weeks about marketing frosted tobacco. We will not add to the already heavy burdens of those afflicted with this article, in the way of a long winded article on the evils, expenses and uselessness of preparing this article for market. It would undoubtedly be for the good of the general interests if every pound of tobacco damaged by frost was put in one heap, set afire and burned to ashes, and we would advise all who can possibly afford to destroy every pound possessed by them, as the stock of low grade and damaged tobacco now in stock in the United States and Europe is almost ample enough to meet any demands for this class of tobacco the coming year, without drawing upon the 1886 crop for a pound. But there are some planters who can hardly afford to utterly destroy their frosted tobacco, as it forms the greater part, if not all, of their modest crops, and is their only dependence for ready money, and it is but natural to expect them to look to it for even a pittance of what they expected, for some cash is absolutely necessary for even those in their position. Hard times and low prices for the past two crops have put them in a position not to be envied, and while they should have devoted at least part of their land to some other money producing crops, unfortunately they have not, and, accordingly, they must look to it for their very modest requirements of cash. But, as we said before, all who can, even by straining a point or two, afford to destroy it, should not put a particle of frosted tobacco (unless very slightly touched) on the market for sale. If they do, they will only add to the load that the low grades have to bear even in maintaining present low prices."
