Longest Sentence in the English Language.

The longest sentence in English literature is found in the act of Parliament, 26 George III., chapter 69, entitled "An act to prevent the enlisting or engagement of his majesty's subjects to serve in foreign service, and the fitting out or equipping in his majesty's dominions vessels for warlike purposes without his majesty's license." The second section of this act contains but one sentence, with 897 words in it, and without a single stop between its first word "and" and its last word "convicted." The seventh section of the present English foreign enlistment act forms one sentence of 600 words. Gladstone forms longer sentences than any other English writer and speaker, present or past. One of his longest sentences was in a speech in August, 1890, at the National Liberal Club. It occupied twenty-four lines of news type, and contained 214 words.

The Ideal Wife.

There is no greater blessing can befall a thinker than a union with a woman who is at least his peer in her appreciations. writes Walter Blackburn Hart in The New England Magazine; "and it must be remembered that Balzac claimed that 'appreciation is complete equality.' A woman worldly enough to protect a thinker from the world, and unworshipful enough to live with in the world of his thought and imagination, is the ideal wife for the man of high aims, and with such a woman a man can live serenely in the most desirable society. Emerson aptly puts it thus: 'When a man meets his accurate mate society begins and life is delicious.' In an atmosphere of love and sympathy one lives more vividly; there is a spur in every meeting, an inspiration in every absence. 'Life itself begins with such a union; the old adage that 'he lives twice who lives well,' has more meaning when it is twisted to read, he lives twice who loves well, and wisely. The man who is rich in himself, his sympathies, his various magnetisms, and reciprocations, is the truly rich man; his store does not tempt the vulgar to robbery or excite the envy of his neighbors, for to them this world of the imagination is nothing; and granting all possible human separations and afflictions such a store will last a lifetime. These are the riches to accumulate. One's own society is the society to cultivate; and to make it attractive to one's self and others, one must cultivate one's self. This is the secret of true greatness, true gentleness, true manners and true morality."

How It Feels to Be Knocked Out.

Says John L. Sullivan in his new book: "I have never been knocked out myself, as the public well knows, but as I have put so many other men to sleep after this fashion I have had a good chance to find out what their feelings were. The most effectual point to reach a man to knock him out is right on the point of the chin. In explanation of this the doctors tell me that point is connected with the spinal column, and the effect for the time is to paralyze the brain, though not effectually to weaken him. The sensation, as it is described to be, is about the same as that felt by a man who has been under the influence of ether and is coming out of it. A man's mind, they tell me, seems confused, sick, giddy. He has no feeling of pain, but simply a sense of numbness or deadness which renders a man non compos mentis for the time. To verify what I have said about there being no pain, I can mention several instances where men have come to after having been knocked out, and instead of complaining of pain, asked various questions, showing that they were simply insensible to all feelings or acquaintance with the surroundings. I have heard men ask very different questions. For instance one fellow at Nashville, Tenn., that I had knocked out, came to in about twenty minutes, and the first thing he said was, 'Did I win?' Another man that I had knocked out said, 'When do I go on?' not remembering anything about fighting. I think, in fact I am sure, that the effect of a man being knocked out is not as serious as people think, and leaves no mark, nor does it inflict any special damage."

THOMAS HURRICANE PAYNTER

The Gentleman from Greenup Who Generalled the Gerrymander Renominated for Congress.

A CYCLONE

Hon. Thomas H. Paynter, present Congressman from this District, was nominated at Carlisle yesterday for a third term.

The "trade of politics" has become so perverted that one cannot do justice to an opponent without having his motives impugned; but it is only fair to say that Mr. Paynter has made a good Representative. So far as we know, he has been attentive to the wishes of his constituency, and business entrusted to his care has received prompt attention. This is not saying a great deal it is true, but it is much more than any Democratic paper would say of a Republican Representative, no matter what his capabilities or performances, and it is much more than can be said of any of Mr. Paynter's Democratic predecessors.

But while THE LEDGER is willing to do justice to the good points in Mr. Paynter's career, it cannot utter a word in extenuation of his course in Congress.

He has, in season and out of season, denounced the great American system of Protection which has made this the leading manufacturing Nation of the earth; He has voted for every measure that has for its purpose the disruption of our present incomparable financial system—a system that has challenged the admiration of the ablest financiers of the world;

He has opposed every measure that meant a betterment of the Nation's affairs;

He is chiefly responsible for the disgraceful gerrymander of this District, whereby the voice of a highly respectable minority has been stifled—just as the assassin stifles the voice of his victim with one hand and applies the stiletto with the other.

These are some of the reasons why THE LEDGER will oppose the re-election of Mr. Paynter; others will appear as the campaign progresses.

Personally, Tom Paynter is such a clever fellow that we wish he was a Republican; politically, he will travel over his gerrymandered District this fall and tell more lies than a fisherman.

A REMARKABLE fact can be discovered with the aid of a pencil. In the twentieth generation preceding the present, each person now alive had 1,000,000 of ancestors. The exact figures are 1,048,576. Each person had two parents, four grandparents, eight great-grandparents, etc. Keep on doubling until the twentieth generation, and you will verify the immense aggregate given above.

ABOUT four years ago a workman at Beaver Falls, noticing a toad about the size of a walnut, placed it in a little pile of sand, and, laying a large stone on it, never gave it another thought. A year after this particular stone began to show signs of decay, and finally cracked clear across. The crack began to widen, until a few days ago an aperture was made and out jumped a live toad. It was found to be of monster size.

THE BANTAMS.

George Dixon Whips Jack Skelly in Eight Rounds.

Both Fought Like Demons, Each Eager to Win the Rich Purse.

In the Third Round Skelly Gets in Some Good Work, But Dixon Counters in Good Shape—Skelly is Knocked Down a Number of Times.

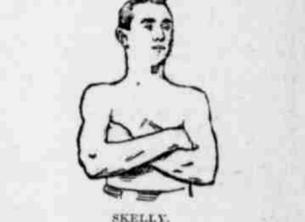

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 7.—The fight between George Dixon (colored) and Jack Skelly (white) for the light weight championship, took place Tuesday night. It took Dixon a few seconds less than thirty-two minutes to knock all the championship aspirations out of Jack Skelly. The fight lasted eight rounds, and after the first one, the result was never in doubt. The rich purse of $7,500 and the side bet of $5,000 was a gift purse and simple for the little colored champion. In the opening round the colored boy fought for the Brooklyn lad's head and face, but he soon found that Skelly had this part of his anatomy well guarded. Then it was that the black fellow changed his tactics. He began a bombardment on the stomach, ribs and heart. He did all of his initial work with a left-handed half upper cut. For four or five rounds he made play for the same spot.

It was not long until the effects of this savage treatment was shown in a great red blotch on Skelly's left rib and above his heart. The savage onslaught on the lower part of legitimate fighting territory caused the Brooklyn boy to lower his guard. This was Dixon's opportunity, and he began to play for the point of the jaw with his right. Skelly tried under the rough treatment to which he was subjected and gradually grew weaker, until in the closing rounds he was a pitiable sight. His wind was gone and in the last two rounds he was little better than a chopping block for his opponent. Dixon was apparently as fresh and full of fight as when the battle began.

From the sixth round until the close it was only a question of how long the New Yorker could stand the severe visitations from the colored boy's wicked fists. He was game and fought back as long as he had the strength to do it. The end came in the eighth. All Dixon had to do was to go up and hit his defenseless opponent.

A cablegram from Charlie Mitchell, of England, was read in the ring. It was a challenge from the Britisher to fight the winner of the big battle Wednesday night for $10,000 a side, within ten weeks from the present time, before any club in England or America offering the largest purse.

Then another challenge was read from Johnnie Murphy, of Boston, to the winner of the Skelly-Dixon fight for $2,500 a side, with a deposit of $500 in the hands of Mr. Frank, the official time-keeper of the club. Several other challenges would probably have been read had not a member of the club arisen in his seat and stated that the Olympic Club had nothing to do with making matches; that they should be made outside and settled within their ring.

After the fight this evening Jack Skelly said: "I don't think I hit Dixon once in the battle. It was simply a case of the hands being quicker than the eye. I am sorry my friends in Brooklyn lost their money on me. I was simply outclassed."

Billy Madden, manager of Joe Goddard, tried hard to make himself heard when Mitchell's challenge was read in the ring Tuesday evening. He said to me that Goddard would fight Mitchell for $10,000 a side and post $5,000 at once.
