In Manchuria dogs are raised for their skins, which fetch a very high price in the market.

Sick headache, biliousness, constipation and all liver and stomach troubles can be quickly cured by using those famous little pills known as DeWitt's Little Early Risers. They are pleasant to take and never grip. Stormes Drug Store.

In a Jessamine county farmer says: Let your seed wheat get thoroughly ripe before harvesting and sow no other kind and you will never have smut wheat.

While there are some counties in the Barley sections which have not been favored with sufficient seasons for timely setting, the bulk of the crop, which is undoubtedly one of the best, is now ready for harvest. Those who have been fortunate enough to plant early have the advantage for an early start in the natural precursor of early maturity, which is the thing to be desired, as it will make possible early marketing and be rewarded by the satisfactory prices which are certainly in store for desirable tobacco planted early.

It is said that buyers in the English market pay two or three dollars more a head for dehorned cattle, because of the belief that they will put on flesh more rapidly with less food. This condition is more easily obtained because the animal is now inclined to keep more quiet, and this change in disposition also enables it to be handled with greater ease, economy and safety.

The shortage in beef cattle is real, and higher prices must be made. Farmers should bear in mind that shortage cannot be overcome in a single season. Get good young stock on the way just as soon as possible.

With the world for our market, and with the best facilities for producing and marketing the best meats in the world, our farmers should meet the advancing prices with better stock and more of it.

At one of the great sales in the East last week a pair of 16-hand geldings sold for $2,000; a second pair for $1,300; a third pair for $1,630, while a brown trotting mare sold for $1,300.

The Lexington Stock Farm says: "Should the President issue a call for 100,000 additional volunteers, the horses required to properly equip this army, would, it is thought, practically deplete the market supply at this time. We are closer to that much-talked-of and long-looked-for famine than a whole lot of people think."

Farmer Jas. A. Davenport tells the Harrodsburg Democrat that the wheat yield will not be nearly what people have anticipated. He says that the black rust has been very bad in the Duncan neighborhood, the crops on the bottom land being nearly destroyed by it. Some of the farmers of that vicinity cut their wheat last Sunday to save it from the rust.

One of the good effects of the mild winter is that there was a good growth of wool through the entire winter upon the Northern ranges. Wool will generally shear heavier there and grade higher than in 1897.

ARROGANCE WILL FALL

Lessons Drawn From the Terrible Fate of Haman.

Showing That Pride Often Bears Bitter Fruit—Vice and Folly Will Be Rewarded—Many Analogous Cases at the Present Time.

The doom of arrogance and the reward of fidelity are lessons which Dr. Talmage here draws from Mordecai on horseback and Haman afoot. Text: Esther vii, 10: So they hanged Haman on the gallows that he had prepared for Mordecai.

Here is an Oriental courtier, about the most offensive man in Hebrew history, Haman by name. He plotted for the destruction of the Israelitish nation, and I wonder not that in some of the Hebrew synagogues to this day when Haman's name is mentioned, the congregation clenches their fists and stamps their feet and cry, "let his name be blotted out!" Haman was prime minister in the magnificent court of Persia. Thoroughly appreciative of the honor conferred he expects everybody that he passes to be obsequious. Coming in one day at the gate of the palace, the servants drop their heads in honor of his office, but a Hebrew, named Mordecai, gazes upon the passing dignitary without bending his head or taking off his hat. He was a good man, and would not have been negligent of the ordinary courtesies of life, but he felt no respect either for Haman or the nation from which he had come. So he could not be hypocritical, and while others made Oriental salaam, getting clear before this prime minister when he passed, Mordecai the Hebrew relaxed not a muscle of his neck, and kept his chin clear up. Because of that affront Haman gets a decree from the monarch, the dastardly king, for the massacre of all the Israelites, and that, of course, will include Mordecai.

To make a long story short, through Queen Esther the whole plot was revealed to her husband, Ahasuerus. One night Ahasuerus, who was afflicted with insomnia, in his sleepless hours calls for his secretary to read him a few passages of the Holy Scriptures, and so while away the night. In the book read that night to the king an account was given of a conspiracy, from which Mordecai, the Hebrew, had saved the king's life, and for which kindness Mordecai had never received any reward. Haman, who had been fixing up a nice gallows to hang Mordecai on, was walking outside the door of the king's sleeping apartment and was called in. The king told him that he had just had read to him the account of some one who had saved his (the king's) life, and he asked what reward ought to be given to such a one. Self-connected Haman, supposing that he himself was to get the honor, and not imagining for a moment that the deliverer of the king's life was Mordecai, says: "Why, your majesty ought to make a triumph for him, and put a crown on him, and set him on a splendid horse, high stepping and full bloomed, and then have one of your princes lead the horse through the streets, crying, 'Honor the man, here comes a man who has saved the king's life!'" Then said Ahasuerus in severe tones to Haman: "I know all about your secondariness. Now you go out and make a triumph for Mordecai, the Hebrew, whom you hate. Put the best saddle on the finest horse, and you, the prince, hold the stirrups while Mordecai gets on, and then lead his horse through the street. Make haste!" What a spectacle. A comedy and tragedy at one and the same time. There they go! Mordecai, who had been despised, now starred and robed, in the stirrups, Haman, the chancellor, holding the reins, wearing a crown, and the king, Mordecai bends his neck at last, but it is to look down at the degraded prime minister walking beneath him. Huzza for Mordecai! Alas for Haman! But what a pity to have the gallows, recently built, entirely wasted! It is 30 cubits high, and built with care. And Haman had erected it for Mordecai, by whose stirrups he now walks as a groom. Stranger and more startling than any romance, there go up the steps of the scaffolding, side by side, the hangman and Haman, the ex-chancellor. "So they hanged Haman on the gallows that he had prepared for Mordecai!"

Although so many years have passed since Mordecai and Haman reigned, and the beautiful Esther answered to his whilms, and Persia perished, yet from the life and death of Haman we may draw living lessons of warning and instruction. And, first, we come to the practical suggestion that, when the heart is wrong, things very insignificant will destroy our comfort. Who would have thought that a great prime minister, admired and applauded by millions of Persians, would have been so nettled and harassed by anything trivial? What more could the great dignitary have wanted than his chariots and attendants and palaces and banquets? If influence or circumstances can make a man content and happy, surely Haman should have been content and happy. No; Mordecai's refusal of a bow takes the glitter from the gold and the richness from the purple, and the speed from the chariots. With a heart puffed up with every inflation of vanity and revenge, it was impossible for him to be happy. The silence of Mordecai at the gate was louder than the braying of trumpets in the palace. Thus shall it always be if the heart is not right. Circumstances the most trivial will disturb the spirit.

It is not the great calamities of life that create the most torment. I have seen men, felled by repeated blows of misfortune, arising from the just, never desponding. But the most of the disgust which men suffer is from insignificant causes; as a lion attacked by some beast of prey turns easily around and slays him, yet runs roaring through the forests at the slightest on his bristly neck of a few insects. You meet some great loss in business with comparative composure; but you can think of petty trickeries inflicted upon you, which arouse all your capacity for wrath, and remain in your heart an unbearable annoyance. If you look back upon your life, you will find that the most of the vexations and disturbances of spirit, which you felt were produced by circumstances that were not worthy of notice. If you want to be happy you must not care for trifles. Do not be too minute in your inspection of the treatment you receive from others. Who cares whether Mordecai bows when you pass, or stands erect and stiff as a cedar? That woodman would not make much clearing in the forest who should stop to his knees over a little bribe and scratch his head in the thick; nor will that man accomplish much for the world or the church who is too watchful and appreciative of petty annoyances. There are multitudes of people in the world constantly harassed by trifles, they pass their lives, not in searching out those things which are attracting and deserving, but in spying out with all their powers of vision to see whether they can not find a Mordecai.

Again: I learn from the life of the man under our notice that worldly vanity and sin are very anxious to have piety bow before them. Haman was a fair emblem of entire worldliness, and Mordecai the representative of unflinching Godliness. Such were the stages of society in ancient times that, and this Israelite bowed to the prime minister, it would have been a commendation of respect for his character and nation. Mordecai would, therefore, have sided against his religion and made any obsequious or dropped his chin half an inch before Haman. When, therefore, proud Haman, attempted to compel an homage which was not felt, he only did what the world ever since has tried to do, when it would force our holy religion in any way to yield to its dictates. Daniel, if he had been a man of religious compromises, would never have seen the way into the den of lions. He might have made some arrangements with King Darius whereby he could have retained part of his form of religion without making him in any way obsequious to the idolaters. A cunning man would have retained his rulers and escaped martyrdom if he had only been willing to mix up his Jewish faith with a few errors. His unbending Christian character was taken as an insult.

Faith and rick and halter in all ages have been only the different ways in which the world has demanded obedience. It was once, away up on the top of the temple, that Satan commanded the Holy One of Nazareth to kneel before him. But it is not now so much on the top of the churches as down in the aisle and the pew and the night that Satan tempts the exposures of the Christian faith to kneel before him.

Why was it that the Platonic philosopher of early times, as well as Toland, S. Inoz and Boilingbrooke of later days, were so madly opposed to Christianity? Certainly not because it favored immorality, or arrested civilization, or dwarfed the intellect. The genuine reason, whether admitted or not, was because the religion of Christ had no respect to their intellectual vanities. Blount, and Boyle, and the rest of the infidels hatched out by the vile spirit of Charles the Second, as reptiles crawl out of a marsh of slime, could not keep their patience, because, as they passed along, there were nothing in the religion of Christ such as Matthew, and Mark, and Luke, and John, who would not bend an inch in respect to their philosophies.

Satan told our first parents that they would become as gods if they would only reach up and take a taste of the fruit. They tried it and failed, but their descendants are not yet satisfied with the experiment. We have now many desiring to be as gods, reaching up a ter yet another apple. Reason, scorn ul of God's word, may foam and strut with the proud wrath of a Haman, and attempt to compel the homage of the good, but in the presence of men and angels it shall be confounded. "I will smite him," says the Lord, "and then lead his horse through the street. Make haste!"

The archaeologist with his crowbar, and the geologist with his hammer, and the chemist with his batteries, charged upon the "Bible," "yes," "no," "of all creation seemed dead, and the very structure of the earth. The astronomer wheeled around his telescope until the heavenly bodies seemed to marshal themselves against the Bible as the stars in the courses fought against Sisera. Observatories and universities rejected the Bible, and the great and ancient institution of Christianity. They gathered new courage at what they considered past victory, and pressed on their conquest into the kingdom of nature until, alas for them, they discovered too much. God's word had only been lying in ambush that, in some unguarded moment, with a sudden bound, it might spring upon the great and ancient institution of Christianity.

It was as when Joshua attacked the city of Ai. He selected 30,000 men, and concealed most of them; then with a few men he assailed the city, which poured out its numbers and strength upon Joshua's little band. According to previous plan they fell back in seeming defeat, but, after all the round inhabitants of the city had been brought out of their homes, and had joined in the pursuit of Joshua, suddenly that brave man halted in his flight, and with his spear pointing toward the city, 30,000 men bounded from the thickets and another spring to their prey, and the survivors were shot to pieces while the hosts of Joshua swelled up to the city and with their light d torches tossed it into flame. Thus it was that the discoveries of science seemed to give temporary victory against God and the Bible, and for a while the church action as if she were on a retreat; but when all the opposers of God and truth had joined in the pursuit, and were sure of the field, Christ gave the signal to His church, and turning, they drove back their foes in shame. There was found to be no antagonism between nature and revelation. The universe and the Bible were found to be the work of the same hand, two strokes of the same pen, their authorship the same.

Again: Learn the lesson that pride goes before a fall. Was any man ever so far up as Haman, who tumbled so far down? Yes, on a smaller scale every day the world sees the same thing. Against their very advantages men trip into destruction. When God humbles the proud man it is usually at the moment of their greatest arrogance. If there be a man in your community greatly puffed up with worldly success, you have to stand but a little while and you will see him come down. You say, I wonder that God allows that man to go on riding over other's heads and making great assumptions of power. There is no wonder about it. Haman has not yet got to the top. Pride is a commander, well planned and captioned, but it leads forth a dark and frowning host. We have the best of authority for saying that "Pride goes before destruction and a haughty spirit before a fall." The arrows from the Almighty's quiver are apt to strike a man when on the wing.

Priceless Pain

"If a price can be placed on pain, 'Mother's Friend' is worth its weight in gold as an alleviator. My wife suffered more than twice with either of her other two children than she did at together with her last, having previously used four bottles of 'Mother's Friend.' It is a blessing to any one expecting to become a mother," says a customer.

Thus writes Henderson Dale, Druggist, of Carmi, Ill., to the Bradford Regulator Company, of Atlanta, Ga., the proprietors and manufacturers of "Mother's Friend." This successful remedy is not one of the many internal medicines advertised to be unreasonable things, but a scientifically prepared liniment especially effective in adding strength and elasticity to those parts of woman's organism which bear the severest strains of childbirth.

The liniment may be used at any and all times during pregnancy up to the very hour of confinement. The earlier it is begun, and the longer used, the more perfect will be the result, but it has been used during the last month only with great benefit and success.

It not only shortens labor and lessens the pain attending it, but greatly diminishes the danger to life of both mother and child, and leaves the mother in a condition more favorable to speedy recovery.

"Mother's Friend" is sold by druggists at $1.00, or sent by express on receipt of price.
