The Nation's Wealthy Widows

Waldon Fawcett

At the age of 60, Mrs. William Channing Bullitt of Nashville, Tenn., the richest widow in the United States, was living in a house on a hill in nearby Centennial Park. It was the home of her late husband, who had been a cotton planter in Kentucky and had served as a general during the Civil War. Mrs. Bullitt had inherited a large estate, including 100,000 acres of land in the South, and she had invested her money wisely.

Mrs. Bullitt was a member of the board of directors of the Tennessee Trust Company, and she also owned a large-interest in the Nashville Bank. Her wealth enabled her to live in luxury, and she owned a fleet of Rolls Royces and a private airplane.

Mrs. Bullitt was a kindly woman, and she often gave money to charity. She was a member of the Nashville Woman's Club, and she was a charter member of the Tennessee Medical Society.

The widow of the late secretary of State, Mrs. Charles S. Pomeroy, lived in a house on the outskirts of Washington. She was a prominent society woman, and she often attended social events at the White House.

Mrs. Pomeroy was the daughter of a wealthy New York merchant, and she had inherited a large fortune from her father. She had been married to the late secretary of State, and she had been a member of the Republican Party. Mrs. Pomeroy was a staunch supporter of the Union, and she had given money to various war charities.

The widow of the late coal and oil magnate, Mr. F. M. Welty, lived in a mansion on Park Avenue in New York. She was a member of the New York Stock Exchange, and she owned a large-interest in several corporations.

Mrs. Welty was a lovely woman, and she often attended social events at the Waldorf Astoria. She was a member of the Century Club, and she was a charter member of the New York Women's Club.

The widow of the late governor of Tennessee, Mr. W. W. Brown, lived in a house on the outskirts of Nashville. She was a prominent society woman, and she often attended social events at the Governor's Mansion.

Mrs. Brown was the daughter of a wealthy Southern family, and she had inherited a large fortune from her ancestors. She had been married to the late governor, and she had been a member of the Democratic Party. Mrs. Brown was a staunch supporter of the Union, and she had given money to various war charities.

The widow of the late railroad magnate, Mr. J. P. Morgan, lived in a mansion on Park Avenue in New York. She was a member of the New York Stock Exchange, and she owned a large-interest in several corporations.

Mrs. Morgan was a lovely woman, and she often attended social events at the Waldorf Astoria. She was a member of the Century Club, and she was a charter member of the New York Women's Club.

The widow of the late financier, Mr. J. P. Morgan, Sr., lived in a house on the outskirts of New York. She was a prominent society woman, and she often attended social events at the Governor's Mansion.

Mrs. Morgan was the daughter of a wealthy Southern family, and she had inherited a large fortune from her ancestors. She had been married to the late financier, and she had been a member of the Democratic Party. Mrs. Morgan was a staunch supporter of the Union, and she had given money to various war charities.

The widow of the late steel magnate, Mr. Andrew Carnegie, lived in a mansion on Park Avenue in New York. She was a member of the New York Stock Exchange, and she owned a large-interest in several corporations.

Mrs. Carnegie was a lovely woman, and she often attended social events at the Waldorf Astoria. She was a member of the Century Club, and she was a charter member of the New York Women's Club.