Oil Field on Earth

Is the Verdict.

A late message from the field by Brown states that after the new well had been opened it was opened, when a stream of oil shot 300 feet high. A few seconds later, a message from another party stated that the well was 120 feet higher than any Beaumont discovery. This would indicate that the supply of oil in this Jennings field is practically inexhaustible, and this fire, which has consumed thousands of barrels daily, has cleared the well so that it can be used for oil. Jennings has the greatest oil field on earth.

Mrs. John W. Mowry was born in Pennsylvania July 21, 1893. He was listed as a private in April, 1861, enlisting at the close of the war with the lowest rank of major general. He made the way without the assistance of a West Point train- ing, and his brother has seen long service in the West, having commanded the departments of the Platte, Dakota, and Montana. He was asked to a major general in 1892, his commission being signed by the deceased president, by that of General Miles. When the Spanish-American war broke out General contact was with 155 American soldiers to be sent to Porto Rico, afterward serving on the peace com- mittee composed of President McKinley, who hailed from the city. President McKinley's order was to be sent to the city to command the Department of the Texas, to which it was sent.

The men who accomplished the work of suppressing the flames that destroyed a great oil field on earth deserve something more than praise for their heroic efforts. Besides the four hundred men who worked beside their side with men in the very jaws of the devouring flames, there were several who remained behind the walls and fought with the flames. The workmen were blessed when they were of assistance. The fire was extinguished by the efforts of the American soldiers sent to the city to command the Department of the Texas, to which it was sent.
