

Poetry.

I OWE YOU ONE.

HENRY came to me last week,
But I bade the rogue be gone;
With his lips he touch'd my cheek,
For, said he, "I owe you one."

Then he call'd me, love and dear,
And my shoulder lean'd upon,
With a box though, on the ear,
"Sir," cry'd I, "I pay you one."

Acting then the lover's part,
How the fellow's tongue ran on—
Swearing he had lost his heart,
And of course, "I owe'd him one."

Then he paid me double price,
For no bounds his rapture knew;
Kiss'd once and kissing twice,
"Oh," said he, "I owe you two."

SPORTS OF THE HEART.

To hear a tender lover sigh,
I own is mighty well,
And swear poor man he'll surely die
Unless his woes you heal.
How sweet it is to hear him hear,
And sweet it is to please him,
But when their raptures disappear,
How charming 'tis to tease him.

When Grinvelt woo'd his little wife,
And talk'd so wondrous fine,
To be the comfort of his life,
Was my heart's design:
But when he found his joy at hand,
And I no more could please him,
I quickly made him understand,
"I was just as sweet to tease him."

Here to day and gone tomorrow.

IN a certain church yard
With a friend a few days since was walking,
When by men there laid low,
By the all potent foe,
Grim death, they it seems began talking.

I must here, though, digress,
To tell what I confess
Should have been known ere thus far I'd come.
Tom to riches estranged,
His abode often changed,
Decamping without beat of drum.

"How soon we decay,
And are hence snatched away!"
Cried Tom's friend with much feeling and sorrow,
"True, we're here!" Tom replies,
(And he here wiped his eyes)
"To day, but alas! gone to morrow."

English Electioneering.

[From a Tour in the West of England, by Rev. John Evans]

My friend and I now seriously set our faces homeward; taking the stage for London, we first came to the little town of Stockbridge, a borough which Sir Richard Steele formerly represented in Parliament. A curious incident is related respecting his being chosen at this place. He carried his election by sticking a large apple full of guineas, and declaring it should be a prize of that man whose wife should be the first brought to bed after that day nine months. This merry offer procured him the interest of all the ladies, who, it is said, commemorate Sir Richard's bounty to this day, and once made a vigorous effort to procure a standing order of the corporation, that no man should ever be received as a candidate, who did not offer himself on the same terms.

Matter.—Gold beaters afford us the means of demonstrating the minute divisibility of matter; they can spread a grain of gold into a leaf containing fifty square inches which leaf may be readily divided into 500,000 parts, each visible to the naked eye. The natural divisions of matter are, however, far more surprisingly minute; there are more animals in the melt of a single codfish than men of the whole earth. It is said that a single grain of sand is larger than four millions of these animals; yet each of them possesses a heart, stomach, bowels, muscles, nerves, veins, glands, tendons, &c. It has been calculated that a particle of the blood of one of these animals, is as much smaller than a globe one twentieth of an inch in diameter, as that globe is smaller than the whole earth.—Lon. pap.

DUBLIN, AUG. 23.

The late storm.—Friday night, about nine o'clock, the streets of Glasgow, Greenock, &c. were most brilliantly illuminated by a meteor or ball of fire. Its passage was almost instantaneous, and the appearance was very similar to that which would have been produced by inflaming a quantity of gun powder at a considerable height.

The following is from a gentleman who was a passenger in one of the London coaches, going to Exeter:—"About 8 o'clock on Thursday night, when within two miles of Woodyatt's Inn, on Salisbury plain, a tremendous storm of thunder and lightning commenced, and lasted, with little intermission, till 3 o'clock next morning.—It is impossible for the pen to describe, or the imagination to paint, any thing so awfully terrific.—The earth and atmosphere for miles round, seemed one continued volume of liquid fire. Deer and cattle were scattered in every direction along the road; and every thing seemed to portend a total dissolution of the whole system.—There were fourteen outside passengers, and six inside, in the coach above alluded to; and just before they reached Woodyatt's Inn, the electric fluid struck a young man on the roof of the coach, and killed him on the spot. He belonged to the Ocean, man of war, and had been to visit his friends in London; he was 22 years of age. His comrade, who sat beside him, was injured in the arm. Three of the coach horses were also struck down, and one of them killed on the spot. The coaches, waggons, and every other vehicle, staid at Woodyatt's Inn, being unable to proceed.—One gentleman, an inside passenger, had a cotton handkerchief burnt off his head by the lightning.
