

EVANGELISM IN ELLSWORTH.

This column is to be conducted for a few weeks by the committee of pastors united in special evangelistic efforts.

"Duty is Ours; Consequences are God's."

This is the spirit in which Rev. William G. Mann gives himself to the vocation which he has assumed by divine imperative.

"To carry a sane, uplifting, permanent evangelism to all." To help those desiring a deepening of the Christian life, and to go to places because of their need and regardless of their financial ability, is his object.

A graduate of Colby college and of Yale divinity school, his preparation is exceptional in a literary way. For sixteen years a pastor in Maine, he knows the pastor's viewpoint in Maine. A pastor-evangelist, he is with us as a leader whom we can safely follow. The meetings are to continue the coming week.

THE NEW EVANGELISM.

Modern Methods as Compared With Those of the Past.

The coming of Dr. Mann to this city this week for a series of evangelistic services, as announced in last week's AMERICAN, very naturally raises the question as to the place and use of evangelistic effort in the work of the church.

As one looks back over the past, it is a most interesting study to note the change in methods of this service that has meant so much to the church. The whirlwind evangelism of the Wesleys and Whitefield has its counterpart, it is true, in some of the methods that are employed to-day, and there are multitudes that are reached by this method who, possibly, would not be reached by any other.

It is true that revivals come sometimes in one form and then another. The great Welsh revival, beginning in its humble way through the power of prayer without any seeming organization, brought a quickening to that country which is still realized in the life of its churches. In a western city a pastor got together with other pastors, and after arranging a program of services and perfecting an organization of workers, launched a campaign that was productive of splendid results.

Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, with his corps of workers, puts more of organization in his great campaigns than perhaps any other man has ever attempted, specializing every feature of it so as to make everything work together in order to get the results desired. And the fine thing about all these efforts, whether they be humble attempts or specialized services, is that they have been blessed, and the King's business has been hastened.

A recent conference called by Dr. James M. Gray, of the Moody Bible Institute, of Chicago, was for the purpose of bringing together many of the men who have been successful in this line of work that they might have a heart-to-heart discussion of the whole topic of Evangelism, and profiting by each other's experience, might suggest ways and means by which this important service could better be done. It was a notable gathering. Many earnest and straightforward things were said, but all in the spirit of that brotherliness that is willing to offer suggestion and receive honest criticism.

The very purpose of the conference indicated that something needed to be changed or amended, and this idea is one that has so developed that the matter of evangelism has been gradually placed on a different basis, thereby investing it with a new significance. The old methods of appeal, largely directed to the emotions, is not so much in evidence to-day. People are appealed to in the matter of their eternal interest on the ground of its essential rightness, and while emotions are stirred, the main effort is to lead the people to see the thing that is right and then, by a whole-hearted effort of the will, to surrender to that claim that Christ has upon the life.

But while the evangelism changes, the evangel is the same. The gospel message is just as vital for this age as for any other, and just as necessary. And while the gospel of culture and other cults have been put forth as the uplifting forces of humanity, and there is a tendency in this sociological age to put the emphasis upon society rather than the individual, each person needs to settle the great question for himself, and is made responsible to that extent by the very terms of the gospel message.

And if the coming services, led by Dr. Mann, scriptural, sane and earnest, will lead some of the people of this city to acknowledge the right that Christ has to their reasonable services, his coming will not be in vain.

Modern Evangelistic Don'ts.

The average man has certain ideas concerning evangelistic efforts that can be clarified or changed by a brief summary of the "Don'ts" that express the common thought of both pastors and evangelists.

1. No invidious comparisons. The message preached is a clear, positive and helpful one. It does not unduly antagonize the attitude of the average man, but assists him to the forming of higher ethical standards. The effort to make men Christian by a rude, terrifying and malignant message has no place in modern evangelism. This does not mean that there are no "teeth" to the message; rather, that they are not necessary.

2. No sensationalism. The religious impulse is aroused by the clear presentation of convincing statements of truth without shallow appeals to emotions. The deeper the message the less of froth and foam are to be anticipated.

3. Modern evangelism does not discourage the church worker by undue criticism of the faults and failings of church members, but rather tends to encourage and inspire them to their best endeavors.

4. Modern evangelism does not slavishly follow any one method, but recognizes the varieties of human experience and conforms the method to the need.

NOTES AND QUOTES.

Fast Company for Christian Workers in Ellsworth.

Livermore Falls reports a gracious awakening, extending to its limits.

Hodgdon, in Aroostook county, has been swept by an old fashioned revival. A recent visitor says: "Sinners must feel lonesome there."

Rev. P. E. Miller and wife, the Baptist missionaries, have been conducting special services in one of the fields within their charge. Nearly a score have brought to decision. "The appeal reaches the men."

In a small town in western Maine, special services resulted in the awakening of the most influential men of the place, one of whom has been the town's moderator twenty-one times and selectman twenty-five years. These people are under the work of the church and carrying it forward.

Recently several towns in Hancock have felt the result of the increasing evangelistic effort with wonderful blessing—notably Franklin, where Rev. W. G. Mann has just closed a series of meetings.

A friend of the writer recounts how several years ago a Swedish church voted to observe the week of prayer. The services proved so helpful that at the end of the week it was decided to continue a month. When the month was done, the people were so interested, coming every night of the services, that they would not discontinue. Springtime, with its long days of extra work—fort his was in an agricultural section—did not abate the enthusiasm. Through the summer season and harvest time the meetings held on without decrease of interest or numbers, so that finally it was a year of prayer.

Eight years ago Rev. Charles L. Goodell, D. D., the Methodist pastor-evangelist, assumed the pastorate of Calvary church in New York city. New York city has been called the "graveyard of ministers", and the friends of the doctor thought he faced a change where he could not expect the sweeping results he had been achieving year after year, and notably in the pastorate he left to go to the city. He faced the issue without flinching; preaching, praying, he practiced his characteristic evangelism, and with the reward in the first year of over 350 additions on confession of faith. He is closing his work to go to another large church of the city, and his record of achievement shows that in the four years that he has stood to this post he has carried a membership of 1,000 past the 3,000 mark, and made a work which was proceeding "at a poor dying rate", the largest numerically of any Methodist Episcopal church in the world, besides investing it with power defying estimate in statistics.

First Call to the Colors.

The informal gathering on Monday evening at the Baptist church was started by several hymns, prayer by Rev. P. A. A. Killam, and a short explanation of the meetings by Rev. E. D. Kizer. He said the keywords of the meetings would be "Decision" and "Consecration". Evangelist Mann then spoke succinctly upon several points of interest, saying in part: "We must have something definite in view for these services. An aim that involves a definite prayerful decision to achieve for the kingdom definite results is what we must seek. We must recognize that the Christian's life is the important thing. President Dwight once said: 'When I began the Christian life I thought I had to carry it, but when I became seventy, I found it carried me.' But the fact is that we do not need to be seventy to know this. The value of the Christian life is hope, happiness, peace, love."

"Then we must know God is with us. Once President Finney, of Oberlin college, when he found an abundant harvest in a certain community, said: 'I do not understand this, but I know someone has been praying.' An investigation revealed that a blacksmith had been greatly burdened for a spiritual awakening. If we have been praying for the kingdom of God, it will come. If we have not, but will, we shall see it coming."

At the conclusion of the address, pledges for Christian service were distributed and a number of pledges were received. Mr. Mann greeted the people before final adjournment.

A Prayer for Maine.

We thank thee, our Father, for our State and all its grandeur of Christian possibilities. Thou, who hast placed here so many noble men and women, so many sturdy boys and girls, and hast loved them with an everlasting love, grant that those who have seen the heavenly vision may not be disobedient and may not be weary in their efforts in seeking the coming of Thy kingdom in its love and power, its consolation and its hope, in all our State.

In His Name who loved us and gave himself for us, we pray. Amen.

Schoolhouse Construction.

Believing that there are many school buildings that offer menace to the health of pupils, State Superintendent Smith will ask the present legislature to fix some minimum requirements in schoolhouse construction. These will deal only with such fundamental points as lighting, ventilation and sanitation.

Speaking of this matter, Superintendent Smith says: "A few years ago the frightful Collinwood disaster, destroying by fire the lives of many children, resulted at once in the expenditure of vast sums for fire protection. This expenditure was made ungrudgingly."

"Because the losses that result from bad health conditions come more insidiously, it is less easy to focus public attention upon the necessity of improvements along these other lines. That they are necessary, anyone familiar with the conditions of some schoolhouse can hardly deny."

A Large-Sized Business.

The work of a life insurance company is done in so quiet and unobtrusive a way, unless it be when a canvassing agent is undertaking to interest a prospect, that it attracts little attention, and few realize the good that is so steadily and frequently being accomplished. A broader idea upon these matters, however, comes from an examination of the annual report of an institution like the Union Mutual Life Insurance company which is printed to-day, and which shows the payment of nearly $800,000 in death claims the past year, and $200,000 in endowments.

These are large figures and indicate that a sizable business is being done by this Maine company, now sixty-three years old, which has an annual income of more than $3,000,000, and writes more than $1,000,000 of new insurance upon the lives of Maine people every year.

Although it will be seen that the Union Mutual is of importance in the business of the State, and that the transactions which it handles, covering millions of dollars annually, and including the loaning and investing of substantial sums in Maine, aggregate a heavy volume. From the standpoint of reciprocity, considering the large business which the Union Mutual brings to Maine and the impetus which this adds to commercial affairs, there may be said to be considerable inclination on the part of citizens of the State to patronize the home company when taking life insurance, which shows in the fact that $11,500,000 of insurance are now in force upon the lives of Maine people.—Advt.
