Now with a nail-puller around the horns or in her mouth secured attachment into A. Lustfield's garden Saturday night and proceeded to play havoc with the carefully cultivated vegetable beds and removing and tramping down every vestige of Mr. Lustfield's efforts in gardening. The animal succeeded in getting away before discovered. Mr. Lustfield says, and we believe with right, that a man who leaves his cow running at large at night is a criminal and should be punished by the loss of his critter. Is it not about time that people wake up to the cow nuisance?

The men employed at the exploration on the hill, near the falls, between the two railroad tracks say they will commence shipping ore before C. T. Roberts returns if he stays away much longer.
