APPROPRIATED $250,000.

A Nature Faker.

A hen hawk early tried to pluck a diamond stud from the shirt bosom of Thomas Norwood of Brookfield, N. J. It is supposed the bird thought it was dealing with a glowworm. Norwood tried to beat off the bird with his hands, but failed, and then Jonah, a pet game rooster, flew to his master's aid and pecked out the hawk's eyes. Finally Norwood wrung the hawk's neck, but not before the bird, whose wings measured four feet between the tips, had torn most of the clothes off him. It had also got in one grab on the faithful rooster and torn out most of the latter's tail. Jonah was still game enough to put to flight a neighbor's bulldog that had butted in to see the fracas.

Spooning Censors There.

Flirt cops, or more politely, spoon censors, will be Santa Monica's latest innovation in the direction of beach purity if present plans are realized. It is proposed to detail special police officers to patrol the sands and have for their particular duty the regulation of the Lulu and Leaning stuff, for which Santa Monica strand has become justly famous. A further function on the part of this detail will be the enforcement of the newly passed ordinance touching upon skirts for men's bathing suits and at least knee length for costumes of women bathers. The policemen are to be given plenary powers in the matter of what is too lurid coloring and will be empowered to make arrests at their discretion.

A Mariner at Fifteen.

John Dudley Hall, a fifteen-year-old Pinora (Ga.) high school boy, wandered into New York police headquarters looking for shelter. Since June 3 he worked his way to Savannah, Hamburg, Germany; Leith, Scotland; Dundee, Scotland; Leith again, Hamburg again, London, England, and then to New York. He had a letter from Daniel Svenson, assistant superintendent of the Savannah Port society, stating the boy had had his parents' consent to travel, to ship as a seaman, or to go sailing in any other capacity. A ship's master might wish. Hall said he was hungry, having been in New York several days, spent all his money and could not find work. He was sent to the Children's society.

Pope Leo XIII. and the Pigeon.

The illness of the pope recalls a touching story which went the rounds at the time of the illness of Leo XIII. Every day at a certain hour a pigeon, after the manner of Noah's dove, used to come to the study of the pontiff, who, no matter what the business in hand, would go to the bird and feed it. On the day that the pope was seized with his fatal illness the pigeon came as usual, but found the window closed. The bird flapped its wing against the pane and then struck the glass with its beak. The pope heard it and ordered the window to be opened and his camerier to feed it. The bird would not eat, but perched itself on the dying pontiff's couch, and there demonstrated its delight at seeing its old friend and protector.

Wild West Stunts in France.

A French artillery officer, Lieutenant Anstenu, at a fete organized by a regiment in camp at Sissonne successfully undertook a feat that puts him in the advanced wild west class. He took 40 horses from his battery, arranged them in a column of fours, and drove them while standing on the backs of the last four. The reins required measured over 1,000 feet and he was obliged to wrap his arms in cloth to prevent their bruising the flesh. This equipped, he ruled his team through several evolutions, ending in a charge at the dead run, and bringing his team of 40 to a halt without disorder. The horses had had no special training.

From the Crowd.

The cautious player had been in for nearly half an hour without scoring a single run, and the fielders were beginning to get annoyed. His gentle play at last grew so pronounced that they closed in to within a few feet of him, waiting eagerly for a catch. The light began to fall. It was essential that his wicket, which was the last should fall before the time came to draw stumps. Closer and closer came the fielders, until there was barely room for the player to raise his bat. Suddenly a thin piping voice was heard from amongst the spectators: "Look out, Bill!" it said. "Take care you don't get your pockets plucked!"

Ducks Trained to Call Wild Birds.

With ropes attached to a collar on their legs, thirty wild mallard ducks, owned by duck hunters of Clark county, are being daily rehearsed for their prospective roles of live decoys, which they will play starting with the opening of the hunting season on Oct. 1. Six weeks ago the birds were feathered balls of fuzz, but with careful treatment and feed they have developed into splendid specimens. Under the constant tutorage of Jess Troch the ducks are learning by constant practice to call to their wild brothers and sisters in the air—Vancouver Correspondence Portland Oregonian.

Lightning Blinded Him.

With the sight of one eye totally destroyed by lightning and but little hope of saving the other, Harry Adams submitted to a delicate surgical operation at the home of his father at Atlantic City, N. J. Mr. Adams, who is twenty-four years old, is interested in a Philadelphia auto truck company and was in the offices of the concern when the severe electric storm broke. Standing before a large mirror opposite a window on the Broad street side of the building, the reflection of the vivid flash of lightning so affected his optic nerves that he fell to the floor unconscious. When he was revived it was found that the young man had lost his sight and he was rushed in an ambulance to a hospital. Later he was removed to his home in this city. Specialists who made the operation fear his injuries are permanent.

Home Helps.

A newspaper can be made use of in a variety of ways in the household. It is invaluable for rubbing up the kitchen grate, and does as good work as a brush. It can be used for cleaning stained bottles. Nearly fill the bottle with water and into this put small pieces of newspaper until the water is filled with them, suggests an exchange. Work them around with a stick, after which wash out with clean water, and the bottle will be found as clear as crystal.

Another Definition.

"Politics is like marriage—and you know what the pretty widow said about marriage at the seashore." The speaker, Congressman Hardwick of Georgia, smiled and continued: "A somewhat passe summer girl, at the end of a season that had left her further than ever from the matrimonial harbor, looked sadly seaward and said: 'Well, marriage is a lottery.' But a fair young widow, whose engagement to a millionaire of fifty-two summers had just been announced—the fair young widow with a toss of the head retorted: 'Don't you believe it. It's a game of skill!'"
