Supreme Court Takes Stand For Right

The U.S. Supreme Court decision delivered May 11, outlawing public school segregation in any of the 48 states and the District of Columbia, was a victory for right and justice and a moral victory for America. It was not a stroke of good fortune or a victory for the civil rights of the American Negro, as some observers and editorialists claim. The decision is an achievement achieved by orderly constitutional processes, will have the creative effect of creating greater unity and understanding among Americans, and unity is what we need—and must have today in America.

The Supreme Court recognized that the time had come for a direct application of the fundamentals of the Constitution and decided to act on the merits and purposes of the case before it rather than on the background of the general conditions or purposes of a part of our common country, the existence of which have generally broken our present way of life. The Supreme Court decision, therefore, is only those who have traveled in the white or country or parts of our society and our State Steward really know how new our rape segregation has been to our national integration. Our daily press has been, and even in the north have referred only to the critics abroad and the southern daily press as if all except in the South itself.

The international reputation was a possible factor in the underlying thinking of the justices of race, but not for the additional immediate ones. The United States Supreme Court, the highest court in the land, has the right to act on the merits and purposes of the case before it at any time for any reason it sees fit. It is a Supreme Court that is given the right to act on the merits and purposes of the case before it. The Court may be actuated by a desire to move forward in the direction of the Constitution and the decision is an immediate result of the Supreme Court's action to act on the merits of the case before it.

The decision was in a case involving segregation in schools. The NAACP and other Negro organizations have been active in the field of civil rights for many years and have been involved in the fight against segregation in schools. The Supreme Court decision has been widely hailed as a victory for civil rights and has been applauded by many African American leaders and organizations.

The decision has been described as a major victory for civil rights and has been hailed as a landmark decision. The NAACP and other organizations have been active in the field of civil rights for many years and have been involved in the fight against segregation in schools. The Supreme Court decision has been widely hailed as a victory for civil rights and has been applauded by many African American leaders and organizations.

The decision has been described as a major victory for civil rights and has been hailed as a landmark decision. The NAACP and other organizations have been active in the field of civil rights for many years and have been involved in the fight against segregation in schools. The Supreme Court decision has been widely hailed as a victory for civil rights and has been applauded by many African American leaders and organizations.