for this child of a stranger. She would appreciate all the lovely depths of his aympathy. She would be incredulous of the statements of that red-neaded Bobby. She might even think Bobby deserved corporal reproval. And, when she passed through the gates alone what a lingering glance would she not send back to him where he nat caring for the child of a lonely young widow. Then she disappeared and Merrivell found himself staring down upon the big, covered basket she had threat in his hand. Halle! What kind of a game in the Tous trun! Was the child in the bask. ? What his child dead? Was the child the bask. ? What his child dead? Was the child the bask. ? What his child dead? Was the child the bask. ? What his child dead? Was the child the bask. ? What his child dead? Was the child the bask out on his freshead. He could feel it trienting down his checks. He giared wildly around. He sank weakly down on the beach, never relaxing his grip of the heavy basket. Should be out for it and run? Would not that groupe suppleton! Or me: Should be out for it and run? Would not that arouse supplicion! Or merical backens! Here was lone Wray now coming directly towards him, and looking awest as a rose in her this assumer gown and big leghen and. He was wifely auxious that she maked in some astonishment? Are passed in some astonishment? Are you ill?" she asked. "I have never seen you appear so—" she hesitated for a word—"so, disturbed," she concluded.

He staggered to his feet, still bold-ing hard the handle of the basket in his left hand and jerking off his hat

"No-no! I'm all right—at least—"
Here something in the basket moved.
He glanced down in a panic. Ione's bewildered gaze followed his. Did that contain the mystery of his pallor, his excitement, his distracted air?

"It's—it's alive!" he said in a blood-cyrdling whitener.

"It's a child!" "It's a baby!" "It's tied in that hasket!" "Here's a loophole for air!" "Who does it belong to!" "Who does it belong to!" "The man was abducting it."

The cries increased in number. Exclamations of horror resounded. A couple of railway officials passed through the throng. And meantime, the basket rocked away on the bench in an uncanny fashion that sent shivers down the each of the least imaginative.

"I don't know anything shout it!"

protested Merrivell in an agonized feal, "A lady gave it to me to hold intil her return. I—"

I Lowering looks met his. A threat-uning growl arose.

'that's all right, sir!" grunted out a man apparently panoplies with authority. "We'll attend to you, Officer, keep your eye on this fellow! I am going to open this basket."

He whipped out a kuife—bent down. The curious crowd pressed closer. Not

The curious crowd pressed closer. Not one of that breathless mob moved as one of that breathless mob moved as the knife snipped along the taut lines. Suddenly the lid was jerked upward. There was a cry from the basket—not the cry of a child. It was a yelp. A wooly white poodle poked out his head and looked inquisitively around.

The how! that went up from the observers caused the horrying auburban-ites on the fron staircase to stand aghast. The big policeman burst into a bellow. He took his hand from Morrivell's arm. Iona laughed through her frightened tears. And, just when the hubbub was at its height, a fran-tic woman burst through the throng. plowed her way to the beach, to basket, her black eyes flashing

And I shall not have my beautiful little form to keep him quiet until we should have started I went away to get a irific more. He would have slept the whole way! But you—you impostor! You have betrayed me! You have acused my confidence!" She stormed away at a wonderful rate. "O, my precious pet!" she waited at last, catching the drowsy canins to her She stormed bosom, "it's astonishing that he didn't try to steal you!"

"I-I didn't know it was a dog!"
protested Merrivell weakly. She flung flercely around. "What did you think it war?" she demanded.

"Oak Park train-a-all a-b-oard!" bawled the starter.

Merrivell and Miss Wray sat together all the way out. They laughed immoderately. He was assured he might call. He did—in fact, he is still might call. He did—in fact, he is still calling. To be explicit, there is a rumor that—but this may be gossip. Anyhow, the girls in the mail order department smile when loun's work takes her to the cloth goods atsle. And Will's fellow-workers are guying him for taking down navajo tine when she asked for sunburnt rose. At all events, these young people seem to be happy together on their free Saturday afternoons. Best of all, Bobby, by some mysterious process, has been comelli-ated. As a chaperon, self-satisfied, obiquitous, and decidedly superfluous, he merits commendation, and gets nickles, dimes, and sometimes even— quarters.

Now when the formation of a corps of sigilish assumed does not seem the solutely quisotic, a modern incident that practically illustrates the fitness of some or defensive warfure may profitably be recalled. It happened during the positionals war, at the second siepe of Jaragoess, which full after a general assault led by Marshall lances on Feb. 18, 1809. The profits was Augustina Zaragoes, and her Language on Feb. 13, 1809. The preciar was Augustina Zargaoza, and her valorous deeds, rogether with those of her handed colleagues, are thus described by a leading writer on this Brited of European history: "Bite had breved with mashaken courage a cancer rear the gate of Patillio at the locate flege, and she again took her left at these when the enemy respect there when the enemy respect. See, general, she said to again with my old friend. Her his gaid being struck with a cannon said as as served his battery, she calmy temped into his place, and pointed supped into his place, and pointed to as he lay bleeding at her side excently she was to be seen at the her clock, sword in hand, cheering is her clock, sword in hand, cheering on the soldiers to the discharge of she risk that the discharge of she risk that the same that the same risk that the same risk that dearried to the French camp, and contrived to escape. Then come ficuse telling sentences: "A female cores was formed, to carry provisions and water to the combatants and remove the wounded, at the head of which was Donna Benita, a lady of rank. Several hundred women and fildien r wished during the slege, not which was Donas Henita, a lady of rank. Several hundred women and children rerished during the siege, not by hombs or cannon abot, but in actual combat." Southey, in the peninsalar war, writes eloquently on the patriotte devotion of these women. Byron apoatrophises "Spain's maids" in some glowing stantas of "Childe Harold," and he saw Donna Augusta at Seville on the Prado, where she walked daily, decorated with medala and orders. Wordsworth probably refers to her as the "Boy of Saragosas," in a touching paragraph of his essay on the convention of Cintra. She was young and beautiful, "of fairy form, with more than female grace," and Wilkie's picture, called the "Maid of Saragosas," ranks smong the finest examples of the second or Spanish period of his art.—London Queen.

The Story of the Stemp-Tailed &

The story of the Stemp-Tailed Recred Seakes.

Pertaining to the elevated scene of Sir Charles Warren's latest feat at arms there is a Sative legend which runs thus, says London Telegraph. Many years since there died a celebrated Zulu chief. At his obsequies there gathered a notable hand of warren's and others. In the midst of the acceptive years affected in an appearance. A youthful warrior, thirsting for glory, sprang forward and struck the reptile with some description of lethal weapon. The blow severed the creature's tail from its body. The chief witch-doctor present reprehended the act, and averred the python was the spook of a warlike ancestor of the recently departed chief. The creature, deprived of its tail, recovered health in time:

of its tail, recovered health in time; and though stump-tailed, became sacred. Ever since this story has found believers. The Boers, superstitious as they are, soon lent a willing ear, the story became reixed up in own somewhat prolific spookology. Certain it is this stump-tailed anake—or another of the same pattern—appears from time to time. At every appearance, it is alleged by the Boers of the neighborhood, some event of great portent is on the tapis. Per-haps, if this snake has recently ap-peared, it may have had something to say about the relief of Ladysmith, or the advent of Sir Charles Warren the advent of Sir Charles Warren. Spion kop means the hill of spying, and was so called because the Boer Foertrekkers, flying from the British law and restrictions, when they croused the Drakonsberg, paused at this hill to spy out the savage land and to decide in what direction they should Sickness comes high, as is proved by German records in regard to sick in-surance, which is compulsory upon workingmen. Nearly eight persons in that country insure against sickhess and in one year a third of this number reported sickness of some kind or other, the average duration of sickness being seventeen days. a loss in wages alone in one year of more than $22,500,000. Then, of course, there always is extra expense connected with sickpess, such as doctors' bills, medicines, special food and sometimes special care and mainte-nance. These records do not relate to infants or to the old and infirm, but only to working persons during the working period.

Between the northern point of Long Island and Watch Hill lies a row of little islands, two of which—Phim is lend and Goose island—possess a peculiar form of mineral wealth. It consists in heaps of righly colored quarts cables, showing red valley, purple sists in heaps of rightly colored quarts pebbles, showing red, yellow, purple and other hues, which are locally called agates.
