Mr. Editor: We human beings constitute a strange race of mortals. The best of us are liable to be bitten by "fads," to fall into swirls, and to have our brains added and our ordinary good common sense rattled by fashionable whims. In a recent article in your valued columns I called attention to the present prevalent mesmeric craze induced by gazing in anticipation on the shien of mountains of new silver dollars. Recurring to the subject, I would remark that it is not strange that Mr. Bland, who has for fifteen years gone, been chasing the rainbow to catch the bags of silver swung to its receding extremities should have gone stark daff in the bewilderment, but the whole world was struck with amazement last week to see the staid U. S. senate dancing a jig to the jingle of free silver.

In the article referred to, I submitted the inquiry in effect: "What benefit can accrue to the western farmer by reason of the U. S. government paying the silver mine owner twenty-five per cent. more for his white metal than it is worth?" as Mr.

Bland and the U. S. senate propose shall be done. While my good farmer friends are figuring that out I wait to submit another query in the form of a supposition: Rothschilds gets together one million ounces of silver costing him $1,008,000 in our money and ships it to one of our mints. Under the law, as Mr. Bland would have it, the mint has to take it and give him a coin certificate for $1,292,000. Baron Rothschilds takes his certificate to the U. S. treasury and draws out $1,292,000 in gold, which he ships to Europe; with it he buys 1,281,716 ounces more of silver, returns to the U. S. mint, leaves it and takes his coin certificate for $2,556,008, cashes it at the treasury and sails back to Europe with the gold ready to purchase another cargo of silver, all within one month's time! A nice profit of $648,998 for Baron Rothschilds to make out of this government within 30 days! A nice thing for Mr. Bland to contemplate, perhaps! But wherein will it help the western farmer? How will he be benefited by that statesmanship which would enable the European bankers, or the New York bankers for that matter, for they have already been shipping their gold to Europe—ready to buy silver with—to grab such enormous handfuls from the white and yellow heaps piled up by the national tax gatherers?

My good farmer friends, having answered the former query, will please keep on figuring until they are able to point out where the benefit? the statesmanship? the common sense? the horse sense? the mule sense? even the donkey sense comes in in this proposition? Where is the 10-year-old school boy but who will observe the absurdity of the whole thing when once the facts are placed before him? Is it not time for the farmers to stop the jingle of free silver bills of the whirlwind in which certain would-be-statesmen are attempting to rock-a-by them to a contented sleep over a financial precipice, long enough, at least, to cast about them and ascertain what the facts of the case are?

As I showed before, the house bill proposes to coin and throw into circulation every ounce of American silver; it is not pretended that the Bland bill could do any more in this direction, but what it could and most assuredly would do, would be as shown above, to enable Rocky mountain, New York, London and Paris millionaires to rob the nation to an extent that is simply startling to contemplate.

For two days last week, Mr. Bland held the helm and had the power, as he certainly manifested the will, if he had only had the tact and judgment, to have run the ship of state right on to the breakers with the first result of splitting the republican party wide open, to be followed by all the after wild consequences delineated.

For the narrow escape of party and nation we can offer no thanks to a republican senate; whether we owe the greater gratitude to the marvelous incapacity of Mr. Bland to take advantage of the wonderful opportunity thrust upon him, or to the indomitable scoured firmness and sagacity of Speaker Reed is a question over which future historians will phidosophize much. T. H. M.
