The Birth of a Bubble

Another bubble has burst on the swimming surface of the 'Goblet of Time! We hated to see it go—but it was out of our power to hold it longer. Where did it go? Who on earth knows where bubbles go when they burst?

We hated to see it go because it carried with it some lost opportunities of ours, which we do not now know how to replace; it carried friendships which we might have made; it carried kindly feelings and heartfelt sympathies which we might have had.

Still it gave us much. Its iridescent surface was always alive with a kaleidoscopic play of life and colors—a play of rosy dawn, majestic lowering storm clouds and gorgeous sunsets of blossoms and snowflakes, of sunshine and laughter. It was always mirroring—was never blank. Sometimes it mirrored shadows—but it was never blank. Somehow it seemed the play of colors was never so brilliant as immediately after the shadows were dispelled.

It brought us a livelihood, more new friendships and mellowed old ones; it gave us a realization of the debt we owe to our neighbors, our employes and to the citizens of Columbia; it gave us a keener sense of responsibility in the public service we are attempting to render. Still we wish that we might have secured some of the worth-while opportunities it carried away.

Another bubble is slowly rising from the beady depths. Its surface is already alive with the dance of colors. It is the successor to the bubble just departed. It will always mirror—sometimes will mirror shadows—but it will never be blank. It will be constant only in its changes. Who knows what a bubble will mirror? Maybe in it we will find our lost opportunities, the friendships we might have made, the services we might have performed, the smiles we might have bestowed, the standards we might have raised higher. For that reason we are happy in the arrival of the little new-comer. We hope that in it you and yours will find everything that you might have had and the opportunities you thought lost in the bubble that went before.

We wish for you and all Columbia a Happy and Fruitful 1923.
