L. L. Lefler informs us that for the past three months the profits on the increase of his business will pay for all his advertising for twelve months, and he attributes most of this increase to the liberal use of printer's ink. He is our largest advertiser. Yet there are people who say it does not pay to advertise.
Eat Raisins April 30.
Reedley, Fresno Co., Cal., Apr. 7. Editor Herald, Hayti, Mo.
Dear Sir:
April 30 is to be "Raisin Day" in California. The committee appointed to make this day a success has asked each pupil in the Reedley school to write to some person outside of California, inviting them to join us in celebrating this day.
Perhaps you will be interested in the growing of raisins around Reedley, the principal raisin belt of the United States, where nature provides raisins with an abundance of sugar.
First of all, the land must be made level, so the vines may be evenly irrigated. Next, the ground is thoroughly cultivated and prepared for planting. Then, either the cuttings or rooted vines are set out, most usually 10x-15 feet apart. Every winter the vines are pruned, as they make a very rapid growth. They are plowed and irrigated from one to three times each spring and summer.

The vines commence to bear when two years old, but not enough for commercial value until four or five years old.
The first crop of grapes are ready to pick from September 1 to 10. Sometimes the second crop, which is ready for picking about October 1, is picked, but this crop is not often picked unless for the winery.
The grapes are dried by placing them on trays, which are scattered through the vineyard, and the pickers stand between the rows and spread the bunches on the trays. The grapes are ready to turn in about ten days, and are turned by placing an empty tray over the full one and turning them over, then the under layers dry.
After being dried the largest and nicest bunches of raisins are put by themselves, and are called "London Layers." They are taken to the packing house, where they are packed for the Eastern market. The rest are also sent to the packing house and are stemmed and packed. The best are called "Four Crowns," the next "Three Crowns," and so on. The Muscats, which have seeds in them, and are considered the best for raisins, after being stemmed, are sent to a seeder, and after being seeded are packed in small cartons.
Raisins should be found on every table in the United States at every meal. If more people knew of their nutritious elements and various ways of being prepared, there would be more used all over the Union. Here are some of the ways in which raisins may be prepared for table use:
Stewed raisins, raisin bread, raisin cakes and cookies, raisin pie, raisin pudding, raisin candies, raisin coffee, raisin jam.
Trusting this will make you more interested in California raisins, I am, Yours truly,
RUTH ALVEY.
