The Electrical Voice

It is a very delicate electrical current that carries the sound waves produced by the human voice over the telephone wires.

It reproduces these sound waves in their minutest detail and travels with almost the speed of light.

Sound waves travel through the air at the rate of 1,160 feet a second. Carried through the air at that rate it would take four hours for the human voice to cross the continent.

It takes one-fifteenth of a second for the voice to travel from New York to San Francisco, 3,400 miles over the transcontinental line of the Bell system, so that it may be said that telephonic communication from coast to coast is practically instantaneous.

Chief Hutson Issues List of "Donts" For Hallowe'en Night

Don't Wreck Fences, Don't Shatter Windows or Don't Grease the Street Car Track Unless You Want to be Arrested, He Says.

Anticipating the annual series of pranks—some innocent fun-making, some destructive to property—that young people are wont to play upon people's houses and windows on Hallowe'en, Chief of Police Jeff Hutson yesterday issued a statement of "Donts" to The Tribune, warning the celebrators against property destruction and the performance of tricks that may endanger lives.

An effort will be made by the police this year to curb all unruly, rough celebrations on that night and at the same time, the stunts that will come within the bounds of reason and not under the "taboo," will be permitted to be carried on.

Hallowe'en this year will be celebrated to a great extent upon the evening of Saturday, October 30, although the real date of the festive day is the evening of October 31.

Many Hallowe'en parties will be held in the Cape and at various country homes in this vicinity this year. The custom of observing Hallowe'en is becoming more strongly fixed in the community and some of the church organizations in the Cape have made elaborate plans for their parties.

The chief's "Donts" are as follows:

"Don't break window glasses."

"Don't soap windows and don't soap street car tracks. Soap upon street car tracks is a serious menace to traffic and passengers."

"Don't tear down any gates or fences and smuggle them away."

"Don't wantonly break down young trees in the city."

"Don't perform any other malicious destruction of property, such as damaging sheds, garages, vehicles of any kind."

"Don't cut down clothes lines."

"Don't move vehicles that may be standing either in the public highway or in a private yard."

"These are the most important things that the police will watch this week and I have instructed my men to make every effort to apprehend all persons connected with any proceeding covered by this list."

"I intend to have any individual person who is arrested on a charge of violating any of these 'donts' prosecuted for malicious destruction of property. That constitutes a misdemeanor and is punishable with a fine and court costs."

"At the same time, we do not intend to spoil the boys' fun by chasing them in off the streets when they are indulging simply in a game of window-tick-tacking, or playing a joke on their elders by ringing door-bells."

"Even those features may be over-worked and the police will use discretion in determining if anyone is carrying those pranks too far."

Hallowe'en and the notion of playing pranks springs from the old idea that upon Hallowe'en or the evening preceding All Hallow's day, the fairies and elves are at greater liberty than at any other time of the year.

"There is perhaps no night in the year which the popular imagination has stamped with a more peculiar character than the evening of the thirty-first of October," declares R. Chambers, in his "Books of Days," a volume narrating the history of each holiday known.

"It is clearly a relic of pagan times, for there is nothing in the church observance of the ensuing day of All Saints to have originated such extraordinary notions as are connected with this celebrated festival or such remarkable practices as those by which it is distinguished."

"The leading idea respecting Hallowe'en is that it is the time of all others, when supernatural influences prevail. It is the night set apart for a universal walking abroad of spirits, both of the visible and invisible world."

Many quaint customs have grown up on Scotland, England, Wales and Ireland in connection with Hallowe'en and they now are observed, many of them, all over the United Kingdom, and many have been imported to the United States by English people.

The Hallowe'en customs have been made the subject of many songs and poems by well known literateurs. The night probably is best known and celebrated the most in Scotland, Northern England and Wales.

"There is a remarkable uniformity in the fireside customs of this night all over the United Kingdom," Chambers continues. "Nuts and apples are everywhere in requisition, and consumed in immense quantities. Indeed, the name of Nutcrack Night, by which Hallowe'en is known in the north of England, indicates the predominance of the farmer of these articles in making up the entertainments of the evening."

"They are not only cracked and eaten, but made the means of vaticination in love affairs."

"To quote here from Burns' poem of Hallowe'en: 'The auld guidwife's well-hoordit nuts.

Are round and round divided, And many lads' and lasses' fates Are there that night decided: Some kindle, cuthie, side by side, And burn together trimly;

Some start awa wi' saucy pride And jump out—owre the cimly Fu' high that night."

Jean slips in two wi' tentie e'e; Wha' twas, she wadna tell; But this is Jock, and this is me, She says in to herself; He bleezed owre her, and she owre him.

As they wad never mair part; Till, fuff; he started up the lum, And Jean had e'en a sair heart To see't that night."

There is an Irish custom that maidens still observe in the land of Erin and in England and Scotland. They
