Ask Pedestrians to Keep to Left

Striders on Country Roads Urged to Face Owing Traffic in Rambles.

PEIRS OF NIGHT ARE BARED

At Clothing Only Steve was as卅e From Door of Store by "Memorial" Interserted Made to Man.

New York, N. Y.—Striders avoiding injury may yet become very much like their out-door friends and wear a similar kind of headgear. This is the latest plan of the electric road companies, who are now putting the finishing touches on the little-known traffic idea of the late engineer, C. W. Inglis, who invented it in 1893.

The plan is to erect a line of electrically illuminated signs along the 100-yard wide road, with a height of 10 feet, and to light up the same in such a way as to make them visible from a distance of 300 yards. The signs are intended to warn the pedestrian of the coming of a train, and to keep him from crossing the road while the train is passing.

In the meantime, the signs are being constructed in various places, including New York, and are being installed on the streets and avenues.
