

The Servant in the House

West Orange, N. J., has a house that is literally operated by pushing a button. It is the "marvel house" in Honeysuckle Avenue that has been equipped by Thomas A. Edison to show what electricity in this modern day can do in the way of housekeeping on the farm or in the village isolated from city conveniences. For the Honeysuckle Avenue house is complete in itself, with its own electrical plant. A four horse power gasoline engine drives a dynamo that charges the storage batteries, by means of which electricity is available at all hours all over the house. It is used for lighting, of course. It also cooks the food, washes and irons the clothes, and by means of the vacuum cleaner, sweeps and dusts. An electric ice box manufactures its own ice. There are all sorts of handy electric devices, a coffee percolator, toaster, and chafing dish for the dining room. In the bath room, electric heaters dry the towels. In the bedrooms electric heating pads warm the beds. In the drawing room, an electrical Edison phonograph and a home kinaetoscope or small moving picture machine, provide entertainment. Any one can operate the simplified electrical plant. The batteries require no attention except the addition of a little water from time to time. The motor, run simply by pressing a button, will in seven hours store up enough electricity for three days use. The current can be manufactured on a farm, Mr. Edison says, at a reasonable cost. It is expected to revolutionize domestic conditions in rural districts. Electricity has become the real servant in the house to take from woman's hands all the drudgery they have so long performed.—Mabel Potter Daggett in Today's Magazine.

Every human struggle, every human sacrifice, every act of justice or mercy and love, has been woven in the fabrics of the past. No generous impulse of heart, no kind word spoken, no good deed done is lost, but its influence will live long after the actor in life's drama has passed away.—Selected.

"Fire's Out"

THEN comes the matter of insurance. You get out your policy and note the company in which you are insured. Certain questions should not arise to worry you at such a time.

You should not be worried by the question of whether you are insured in a company that dickers and delays over settlement.

You should not be worried over the question of whether the company can pay the claim.

You should not be worried by the question of whether you have had enough protection to cover your loss.

To be insured in the Hartford Fire Insurance Company eliminates the first two of these worries. By consultation with the undersigned before taking out your policy, he will tell you the proper proportion of insurance to carry, and that eliminates the third.
